51,849. And the cultivation of these patches is attended with a great deal of difficulty?—Yes; they have to carry the sea-ware on their backs.

51,850. In short, the island of Rona, on the whole, is not a very suitable place for habitation?—No.

51,851. You have been on it, I suppose?—Often.

51,852. You would be in favour, I daresay, of a well-considered scheme of migration for removing these crofters to some other more suitable locality?—As far as Mrs Wood is concerned, I would advise her to consider very favourably anything that will tend to reduce the unhappiness on the island at large, including what you have stated.

51,853. The island of Raasay is a more suitable place for a crofting population than the island of Rona?—There is no doubt it is richer.

51,854. And the crofters of Rona could be settled on terms much more favourable to themselves in Raasay, under some well-considered scheme of migration, than they are at present?—In that way it might be done.

51,855. The Chairman.—We shall be glad to hear your statement, Lochiel?—My lord, before I read the statement which I have prepared, which is not long, I am happy to say, I should like to ask permission to make a few observations upon certain evidence which was given when the Commission sat at Fort-William. I have no written statement on the subject, and I do not propose to go into the general question of the management of my estate, because I feel that if I had wished to do so, the proper place would have been at Fort-William. But some statements were made at that meeting which were not within the cognisance of those who represented me, and I should wish to say a few words upon these statements. Inverness. — Donald Cameron.

I would first say that I do not believe that if I had been present at Fort-William, the evidence which was there led would have been adduced; and my reason for saying so is this. The other day, when Mr Commissioner Hosack of the Crofters Commission sat there with the view of fixing fair rents, I made a full statement of the way in which my property had been managed. On that occasion, the crofters were represented by two very able lawyers, Mr Macphee and a gentleman from Oban, Mr Campbell, I think, and it is a remarkable fact that in cross-examination on the whole of that full statement I was only asked one question. That question was rather a remarkable one, and I should like to mention it, as it bears upon the inquiry you are now conducting. In my statement I had made a point of the fact that for a certain rent,—£5 I think I mentioned—the position of the crofter on my estate who had work was very much superior to that of his fellow-labourer in the same trade who occupied a back room in Fort-William for the same sum. I quoted the case of two brothers who were both engaged in the tailoring trade, one of whom was a crofter on my estate, who for a rent of £5 had a house, two cows and followers, the right to keep sheep, and all the rest of it; while the other, for the same rent, £5, had a back room in Fort-William. Mr Macphee in cross-examination put this one question to me:—'Is it not the fact,' he asked, 'that the scarcity of room in the town of 'Fort-William is owing to the disinclination on the part 'of the proprietors to feu their land for building pur-'poses?' Of course, that had really nothing to do with the matter; it was the effect, not the cause, that I was pointing to. It did not matter how it was brought about; it was the result that constituted the point I was making. Of course, I was able to answer that it was totally untrue, and that I and the neighbouring proprietor, Mrs Cameron-Campbell, were perfectly willing to grant feus of land, whether for building or for other purposes. In point of fact, Mr Macphee might have known that, for he was occupying one of the feus himself. When your Commission sat at Fort-William, Mr Macphee made it a complaint that I did feu land; thus depriving crofters of the use of it; and yet before the Crofters Commission he complained that I did not. Really, there is no pleasing Mr Macphee.

I could not quite make out from the evidence which was forwarded to me whether Mr Macphee appeared as an agent for the crofters, or as a witness by himself. I observe he did not say who had appointed him, and he gave no account of any meeting which he represented: he appeared to represent the crofters, and then he proceeded to give a great deal of evidence on his own account. Now, I would like to refer very briefly to some of the remarks he makes. 'On Lochiel's estate, 'on the south side of Loch Linnhe, witnesses will be 'adduced to show that at Drumarbyn, Onich, and Bal-'lachulish numerous hamlets existed; which have been 'cleared off.' Now, to me that is hardly intelligible, because these hamlets of Drumarbyn, Onich, and Ballachulish are crofting townships which still exist. They could not have been cleared off, because they exist at the present moment. Then he afterwards made a reference to feuing, which I have already alluded to. The next two or three points I simply mention to show the absolute and entire ignorance of Mr Macphee on the subject he is talking about. He was asked the following question by yourself, my lord:—'You referred 'particularly to the lands of Glen-Dessary and Glen-'Pean; are they grazing farms?' and his answer is 'No, 'they are deer forests.' As a matter of fact, they are not, and never were deer forests. I would like to say in that connection, that although these two places would make deer forests, and I may have had proposals to turn them into a deer forest, I have always steadily refused to do so, for two reasons; first of all, I thought it would be a hardship to the shepherds, who would all have to be turned out,—they have been very faithful servants, and I would not like to do anything to dispossess them; and the second reason is that I am one of those who think that it is not desirable in the present state of public opinion to add to the number of deer forests. I think there are quite enough of deer forests, and except for very special reasons, which may exist, and which have existed, no doubt, I think it is far better that proprietors of land suitable for deer forests should keep them in farms, and should not, if I may use the expression, outrage public opinion by turning them into deer forests. Those opinions I have a right to hold, because, I think, no one has done more to defend deer forests than I have when I was in Parliament. I risked my seat by taking up a line in defence of deer forests, and, therefore, I have perhaps a right to say so much,—that I think it is inexpedient to turn into a deer forest lands especially that would carry a good breeding stock of sheep. That is one reason why I have not done it. Then Mr Macphee is asked another question by your lordship, whether he is aware that the lands on the north side of Loch-Arkaig are at present in the hands of the proprietor as grazing farms, or what; and he answers:—'Clunes Farm is, I understand, 'in the hands of the proprietor; I think it is about 'half a mile from the east end of the loch. Part of it 'is a deer forest.' It is three and a half miles, not half a mile, from the end of the loch, and no part of it is deer forest, or ever was. Then you ask him:—'Have you 'a personal acquaintance with the lands on the north 'bank of Loch-Arkaig?' and he answers:—'No, I have 'not. I have been to the loch, but have not travelled 'up.' And yet in spite of that, he afterwards says:—'I should say generally'—although he has just admitted that he has never been there—'I should say generally 'with regard to Loch-Arkaig and the other lands on 'the Lochiel estate, that they are admirably suited for 'maintaining a large number of additional holdings.'

I shall deal no more with Mr Macphee himself, but he brings forward Mr Macmillan, a very old and somewhat eccentric gentleman, who has a farm at Moy, and this gentleman writes a letter which he gives to Mr Macphee to read. He has not the courage, apparently, to come and be cross-examined upon his letter; but his letter seems to have been read,—I don't know, my lord, whether it is down in your notes or not.

51,856. Mr Sutherland.—Might I ask a question before you proceed further? What report is that from which you are quoting as to what was said at Fort-William, because I cannot recall at the present moment that Mr Macphee said that Glen-Dessary and Glen-Pean were deer forests; it may be that my memory is at fault, but I have certainly no recollection of that statement having been made by Mr Macphee?—I am reading from the transcript of a shorthand note which was sent to me by my factor as a portion of the evidence taken by you.

51,857. I do not say that Mr Macphee did not say what is there ascribed to him, but I have no recollection of his having said so, and I think it was rather assumed all through his evidence, that these places were sheep farms?—I can only say that this was sent to me by my factor as containing the evidence of Mr Macphee and of two other witnesses who made references to my estate.

51,858. The Chairman.—Our own shorthand writer can satisfy us as to what Mr Macphee really did say, by referring to his notes of the Fort-William evidence. [Witness].—Then as to Mr Macmillan, who is a tenant of mine at Moy, and who holds what I may call the best farm on the Lochiel estate: he comes forward but not, apparently, as a representative of the crofters, and he makes a rather unwarrantable attack on me, in regard to the manner in which his sheep get into the forest, and are not got out. Now, that is absolutely untrue. For every hundred sheep Mr Macmillan has bordering on that forest, I have a thousand, and I would ask any man of common sense, is it likely in these days that I should allow my sheep to go wandering into the forest and never get them out either for clipping, or for the sales in September, or for other purposes. The fact is that Mr Macmillan's sheep wander along the high road, and get into the forest from the road. I hardly ever drive along the road without seeing sixty, eighty, or a hundred of his sheep straying there. They thrive very well in that forest; they are never disturbed; I have never pointed them; I have never hunted them with dogs. They are perfectly contented, and when the time for clipping comes they are gathered along with my sheep and they are clipped. Again, in September I do what no other proprietor of a deer forest does; I make a stipulation in my shooting tenant's lease that he is to allow the sheep farmers to have a gathering actually during the shooting season, so that they may have their sheep sent off to market in September. I think a more unwarranted attack was never made upon any person, considering that Mr Macmillan's sheep enjoy this peace and quietness; and anybody who knows anything about sheep knows that they thrive the best upon clean land which has not been grazed. I observed that particularly about the lambs in my forest. He then brings in an old story about a keeper taking an old gouty Englishman for sport, and driving the deer past him. Really I think that does not affect the question which the Commissioners have to dispose of; but I suppose he means by that that the deer are driven in the forest, and not stalked in the usual way. That is absolutely untrue. My forest is not large enough to permit deer to be driven, and they are shot in the usual way by sportsmen, not driven. I suppose the reason he introduced himself in this way was that having this very nice little farm, and knowing that the Commissioners were going to pass along the road, he very likely thought they would cast 'sheep's eyes' on his farm, and try and fill it with crofters, and perhaps thinking of the parable of the unjust judge he thought it would be well to pose as the crofter's friend, in order that it might not be taken for crofters. At least, that is the only reason I can think of.

Inverness. — Donald Cameron.

51,859. Before you pass from the subject, I should like to say that the letter of Macmillan was demurred to at the time, on account of the absence of the writer, and I had some little difficulty about accepting it; but Mr Macphee said he would adopt the letter as his own, and on that understanding, I allowed him to read it.—I thought it was hardly likely that it could have been accepted as evidence without something of the kind.

51,860. It has been our custom to decline to receive any document unless supported by the presence of the writer, and we have again and again rejected such evidence; but Mr Macphee said he was in a position to adopt the letter as his own, and that removed the difficulty in this case?—Then comes Donald Cameron, an old blacksmith at Roy-Bridge. Well, I am informed that in cross-examination Mr Donald Cameron admitted that he had been discharged for misconduct. Of course, I do not want to say anything about that; I do not owe the man a grudge, and I do not want to do him any harm. But, he states that when he was first in Glenloy, that glen was populated by crofters, I suppose he meant, although I rather think in cross-examination he said, that the population he referred to were shepherds. Well, I succeeded to the estate in 1860; at that time a lease had just expired, not only of Glenloy, but of a vast tract of country besides. That was all let to one man, a Dumfriesshire man, Kennedy of Kirkland. He held an enormous tract of country, which carried 20,000 sheep, on a nineteen years' lease, which came to an end in 1860; so that as far back as 1841, at all events, Glenloy was not only occupied as it is now, but occupied by one man, instead of three. Prior to 1841 the old family of Camerons of Strone occupied that farm, and the south side of the glen was occupied by two farmers, at Achnanean and Inverskilivullin. It is therefore impossible that that man's memory can go back far enough to entitle him to say that Glenloy was occupied by crofters.

Lastly, there comes a witness from Balluchulish, Mr William Macphee, who speaks of certain so-called 'evictions' at Ballachulish. If the paper which I hold in my hand is correct, it appears that he began by stating that there were twenty evictions, including an aunt of his own. He then came down to four or five, and eventually, he admitted that in the ordinary sense of the word evictions, there were none at all.

I should like to add one thing about the demand for additional land on my own estate. I have never had any single application made for additional land, on the scale which is generally understood, by any of the crofters on my estate. The average rent of the crofts on my estate, as shown in the appendix to the Report of Lord Napier's Commission, was £6. It is almost impossible to conceive that crofters who occupy holdings of that size, and who are comfortably off, as they are, with plenty of labour going, would wish to be banished to any of these out-of-the-way, inaccessible glens which were alluded to in the evidence tendered at Fort-William.

51,861. Have you had any applications for land from any of your crofters, say within the last fifteen or twenty years?—No, none; it was stated at Fort-William that the only application even alleged to have been made was an application from some crofters at Kinlocheil, and when Mr Hosack was there the other day, that was arranged. It was settled, and no other application has been made for more land.

51,862. Have you had any reason to suppose, whether there were applications or not, that at any time a desire existed among your crofters to obtain more land, either in the form of new holdings, or for extension of existing holdings?—No, and I have reason to believe such a thing is impossible, because my crofters have very large areas of hill grazing. Every crofting township has a very large hill grazing at the back, where the crofters put their cattle and sheep; and if they have not sheep, they take in wintering, which returns them one-third of their rent.

51,863. Is each crofter entitled to put stock on his own land according to his own arbitrary discretion, or is the amount of stock regulated?—It is all regulated. I do not say that there are not crofters who put on more than their proper stock.

51,864. Have you not had any applications for arable land to form additions to the smaller holdings?—No, I have only had one application, and that I granted. Some of the crofters in Muirshalloch, the village you passed before you came to the farm of Moy, asked for some arable land between the canal and the river. I gave it to them, we fixed the rent, and they were satisfied. That is the only application I have ever had.

51,865. And, I understand you to say there has been only one application for enlargement of holdings?—Well, even that was not exactly an application for enlargement of holdings; it was rather a disputed march, and rather than have any trouble about it we arranged the matter.

51,866. It was amicably arranged?—It was amicably arranged.

51,867. Is that the case where there was a joint-minute adjusted by parties?—Yes. But my contention is that from the size of the holdings it is impossible to conceive,—it is almost grotesque to suppose, that these people, who have got all the best land on my property, the land nearest the sea, both at Loch-Linnhe and Loch-Eil, and the Caledonian Canal, should want to migrate to these distant and inaccessible places.

I now beg to submit the statement which I have prepared on the general subject of your inquiry, which is as follows:—

'I was a member of the Royal Commission appointed 'to inquire into the condition of the crofters and 'cottars in the Western Highlands and Islands in '1883, and had thus an opportunity of making myself 'acquainted with the circumstances of the people in 'most of the districts embraced in our inquiry.

'Prior to this, I had many opportunities when 'representing the county of Inverness, of visiting 'all parts of the county and informing myself as to 'the condition of the people.

'I took part in the discussion and adjustment of 'the Report of the Commission of which I was a 'member, but found myself unable to agree with the 'Chairman's proposal on the chief branch of that 'Report. I would have stretched a point to meet 'Lord Napier's views, as I feel that unless unanimity 'is obtained, or something like it, the labours of 'such a Commission as ours are practically thrown 'away. But I considered for the reasons given in 'my own memorandum, pp. 121–129, Lord Napier's 'scheme, though well intentioned and ingenious, was 'far too complicated, and would prove in practice 'unworkable. This was, I believe, the view taken 'by the Government of the day, and indeed in all 'the discussions which have since taken place on the 'subject, I have never heard of these proposals being 'seriously referred to by any one.

'I may say at once, that no one is more willing to 'see land given to small tenants than myself, provided 'I am satisfied that this can be done with advantage 'to the crofters and without injustice to others.

'On the question of whether land should be taken 'compulsorily, I do not propose to say anything. I 'am strongly opposed to forcing any one to accept a 'tenant for his land against his will, but this is a 'point which every one must think out for himself, 'and my evidence here is no better than that of any 'other educated person.

'I would lay down some general conditions which 'should, I think, be complied with, if land is to be 'taken from farms or forests and converted into 'small holdings. These conditions would apply equally 'whether such land is taken compulsorily or not.

'I would suggest that any recommendations which 'may be made should apply to districts where the 'average crofters' holdings are small, and where the 'population is what is called congested. There is, 'I know, a natural feeling, in which I personally 'share, that it would be desirable to re-people the 'glens, which are now depopulated, with crofters 'and cottars taken from places where they have been 'allowed to increase unduly. But I feel that it is 'impossible to carry out this benevolent idea, to 'recommend immigration on a large scale, as a leading 'feature in the Report would, I fear, be open to such 'well founded objection as might lessen the value of 'the Report taken as a whole. On the other hand, 'if the operations recommended by this Commission 'were limited to congested districts, the whole process 'would become more manageable. I do not think 'that any one acquainted with the people would say 'that a wholesale transference of cottars or crofters 'from the Lews to Badenoch or even to Sutherland, 'would be popular either in the one place or the 'other. Whether a transference of crofters from exist-'ing townships to other places should apply to estates, 'or to parishes, or to both, is a question for con-'sideration.

'I would also suggest that such transferences should 'be conditional on the vacated crofts being added 'to adjacent holdings, and that in the case of cottars 'the houses should be pulled down.

'It would be, in my opinion, necessary that when 'land now held by a farmer or as part of a deer forest, 'is taken for the formation of small holdings, such 'land should embrace the whole farm or deer forest. 'Otherwise, if the arrangement be a voluntary one, 'it would not be possible, and if compulsory it would 'not be fair. A sufficient number of crofters to occupy 'the lands proposed to be taken should be assured. It 'would never do to allocate the best portion of a farm 'to a few crofters. This would interfere with the 'working of the remainder of the farm.

'One objection which must occur to every one who 'has considered the subject is, that the power of taking 'land (if compulsion is thought necessary) must operate 'prejudicially on all existing or future tenants who 'hold or who might hold land which, under any Act of 'Parliament, might be made subject to appropriation 'for small holdings. This objection might, to some 'extent, be removed by limiting the period within 'which such land is to be dealt with to a year from 'the passing of such Act. Otherwise the uncertainty 'of tenure must prove highly disadvantageous to those 'in possession. The above are the conditions which, I 'think, should be fulfilled, and probably will be recommended by the Commission.

'But I see difficulties in the way of planting crofters 'and cottars on existing farms or forests, which do not 'admit of easy solution. First among these is the 'question of stocking the new holding. At present on 'most estates the incoming tenant, or failing him the 'landlord, is held bound to take over the sheep by 'valuation. These valuation prices run extremely 'high, and would add considerably to the outlay 'required by the crofter on entering his new holding.

'In the case of a deer forest, some consideration 'must be allowed for the shooting lodge with its 'accompaniments, such as outlay on stables and offices 'or gardens and pleasure grounds, to say nothing of 'miles of deer fences in some cases. But besides, and 'independent of these difficulties, there remains the 'large question of who is to pay for the stock required 'to equip a holding of £30 annual value. I shall deal 'with the question of building, trenching, draining, 'and fencing a little later. These might where neces- 'sary be met by loans guaranteed by Government, but 'Parliament is not likely to advance money or give 'security for live stock. In the first place, if this were 'done, persons in other positions in life who are unable 'to commence business on their own account, might 'not unfairly ask that similar provision of their stock 'in trade should be made. Again, live stock cannot 'in any sense of the word be regarded as an available 'security for a loan of money. I have myself repeatedly 'offered to hand over my sheep stock as security for 'the large sums of money which I have had to find 'from time to time. The offer has been invariably 'declined, the lender intimating that it would afford 'him no advantage over a simple note of hand. As 'Parliament could not therefore consent to the taking 'over by the State of a security which is no security, 'it follows that the new tenants must themselves stock 'the lands. As to whether they are able to do this, I 'must refer to my memorandum, p. 128, and the 'marginal note. Of course, I do not know what 'evidence may have been tendered to this Commission 'on the point, but I know that the impression left on 'the minds of every member of the Napier Commission 'was that only in a very few cases could any crofter, 'and certainly no cottar, hope to find capital sufficient 'to stock a £30 holding.

'I now come to the question how far, omitting the 'difficulty of the sheep stock, a farm of £30 rent may 'be profitably occupied.

'In my memorandum already referred to (p. 133 of 'the Report) I have given an imaginary balance-sheet 'for a farm of this size. I believe that at the time, 'and under conditions which were a part of my scheme, 'that balance-sheet was fairly accurate though it was 'even then admitted to afford but a narrow margin of 'profit to the crofter. But the following alterations 'have now to be made. On the debit side, an addition 'of £5 a year must be allowed in order to arrive at an 'exact estimate of the whole liability of the tenant. 'Prices have fallen to an extent which compels me to 'modify my calculation of the receipts. £1 is now far 'too much to expect for slack ewes; 14s. is nearer the 'mark, and even that is high if the average of the last 'three years is taken as the test. Wedder lambs 'ought to be put at 8s. instead of 12s., and ewe lambs 'at 10s. Wool may be left at 2s. per sheep, though 'that is somewhat high; but I fear stirks will not now 'fetch more than £4 each.

'There would thus fall to be deducted from the 'receipts of the farm, about £24, 8s., leaving them at '£81 instead of £105, 8s., against an expenditure of '£78,10s. instead of £73, 10s. The margin of receipts 'over expenditure is thus reduced to about £3. I must 'here emphasise my remark that £600 to equip the farm 'is not an extravagant figure, and it may be as well to 'go a little into detail on this point. I assume it is 'not suggested that fields now under a regular rotation 'of crops and occupied by a farmer for the purpose of 'growing straw and turnips for his milk cows, or for 'wintering a few tups, would be taken from him and 'given to others. Such a proposal would be unreason- 'able and would defeat its own object.

Inverness.

Donald Cameron.

'I imagine that the sort of land which crofters are 'anxious to obtain, is the old arable and pasture which 'were at one time occupied by small tenants, and 'which are found scattered about all over the High- 'lands. In my calculation of outlay for reclamation I 'have not assumed that the whole of this land will require 'trenching and draining. By taking this item last in 'the following estimate it will be seen what a com- 'paratively small margin is left to be applied under 'that heading. The capital outlay would stand 'thus:—

'Slated house, ...	£200
'Barn, byre, and stable, . .	120
'Fencing, 1000 yards at 1s., .	50
'One horse, ...	28
'Six cows and followers, . .	66
'Farm Implements, . . .	20
Total, .	£484
'Trenching and draining, . .	116
Total, .	£600

'It must be remembered that if a Government loan is 'to be obtained, the buildings must be slated, properly 'built, and subject to inspection by a Government 'official; that the drains must be laid out advantage- 'ously and well-constructed, and the fences of a per- 'manent and substantial kind. We must not lose sight 'of the fact that the cost of carriage to the remote 'glens where these works will be mostly required is 'likely to be heavy, and that skilled labour is just now 'high, owing to the construction, actual (and I hope 'prospective) of so many railways in the north.

'Taking all these things into consideration, my 'estimate of the capital required is, I think, 'moderate.

'But I must return for a moment to the sheep, 'which are likely after all to form the most profitable 'part of the venture. These sheep must be paid for 'somehow, and it will certainly take 30s. a head, or £300 'in all to acquire a flock of 200. If the pasture land is 'occupied individually and not by a common stock, a 'heavy amount of fencing will be required, and even 'then the sheep can never thrive, as they will be unable 'to shift from one side of the hill to the other according 'to the direction of the storm. If they are to be under 'a common mark, I foresee great difficulties in a newly 'created township.

'Regulations, management, and other matters in- 'cidental to a common ownership are not always un- 'attended with some friction, even in communities of 'old standing. In a newly established township, com- 'posed perhaps of crofters and cottars who are un- 'acquainted with each other, I do not see how that 'perfect harmony, which in such a case is so essential, 'can be expected to prevail. It is true that regulations 'may be forced upon any community by Act of Parlia- 'ment but acquiescence in the decision of the majority 'cannot be enforced, and it is to be feared that the 'minority would show their sense of what might 'perhaps be real injustice, by refusing to pay rent.

'I would here mention that these and other diffi- 'culties could not occur if, as recommended in my 'memorandum, the co-operation of the landlord was in- 'vited. If he made a mistake in his selection of 'tenants he would be the chief sufferer and the 'knowledge of this fact would make him extremely 'careful.

'We have now left the crofter only £3 to pay 'interest on £300 (the value of the sheep stock), to 'provide for any hill fencing that may be necessary, 'and quoting from my memorandum, "to provide so '"far as his arable land does not suffice, for himself and '"family, his horse and cows, to pay his rates and taxes '"and to purchase seeds."

'The above figures must, of course, give rise to a 'difference of opinion, and it may be well to apply

'another and a simpler test to the question whether a 'holding of the kind suggested can be profitably 'occupied.

'It will not be denied that in the Highlands while 'it is now impossible to find tenants for large farms, 'there is not the same difficulty in letting those of 'moderate dimensions. No one will now take a sheep-'run of 3000 sheep, while in a farm of the value of £80 'to £120, the same difficulty is not experienced. The 'reason for this state of matters is not that the larger 'farm is less profitable but men are not to be found who 'care to lose the interest on the larger capital required 'to stock it. In the case of a small farm, a tenant can 'be secured who is satisfied if he can pay his rent and 'working expenses, find himself in dairy and other 'produce and perhaps in a favourable year have a small 'balance left to the good. He has probably been 'brought up to farming and likes the life and the 'occupation which it affords, and makes up his mind 'not to look for any actual return on the capital invested 'in the stock.

'But the crofter established (as I consider he must 'be with a large capital outlay) is in this position. He 'has to pay, as it were, two rents, one to the person or 'public body from whom the money was borrowed by 'means of which his holding was made available for 'occupation, and a further rent to the landlord. It is 'difficult to see how this can be done. In my memor-'andum, which was written perhaps unconsciously in a 'spirit too favourable to the crofter, a balance of profit 'of £32 is left to the tenant and that is admitted to be 'bare enough. According to the present calculation, if 'you omit rent altogether and give him the land for 'nothing, his profit would only come to £33. It will 'no doubt be asked; if all this is true what can be 'done? Is there no way of distributing crofters more 'evenly throughout the Highlands? My answer is still 'that this can only be done effectively and without a 'risk of loss through the co-operation of the landlord as 'proposed in the memorandum so often referred to. 'That such co-operation might not be so readily afforded 'as would have been the case ten years ago, must I fear 'be admitted, both on account of the subsequent failure 'of similar experiments, and also in consequence of the 'fall in prices. But if money be advanced by the 'Government at a low rate of interest to form small 'holdings, I am not without hope that in districts 'where a crying necessity for extended holdings exists 'and where there is a genuine desire on the part of 'crofters to embark on farming operations on a more 'extended scale, there may be found proprietors who, 'in their own interests as well as for the sake of their 'people, will consent to devote some suitable land to 'work out the experiment.

'There remains one alternative which I would 'venture humbly to suggest for the consideration of the 'Commission. If it is for the national interest that 'certain lands in the Highlands should be occupied by 'small tenants, does it not seem to follow that the risk 'of the experiment should be undertaken by the State? 'Why should not the Government purchase some 'estate or some suitable farm, of which there are many 'in the market, and let it to tenants at a rent which 'would include the interest on cost of building and 'reclamation payable along with instalments of capital 'during a fixed period of years, when the holding with 'all the buildings and improvements would become the 'property of the tenant? If the Government is to 'advance the necessary capital for establishing all over 'the Highlands a special class of small tenants, it would 'embark on a more dangerous experiment financially 'than that above suggested. The latter, at any rate, 'avoids the risk of inflicting serious injuiry on pro-'prietors, farmers, and other classes of the community.'

(Signed) 'DONALD CAMERON.'

51,868. Lochiel, you said, I think, in the opening part of your statement, that you did not think it desirable to add to deer forests. Now, you are aware that between the years 1872 and 1883 there has been a very considerable increase of deer forests?—There has; I have seen that in the returns. Most of the forests that have been added to, I am afraid, consisted of land which it was absolutely impossible to let for other purposes; they are what we call wedder farms, high land.

51,869. It is said, and probably the figures are correct, that between 1872 and 1883 there were no fewer than thirty new deer forests made; and you may agree with me in believing that since 1883 there has been a further considerable afforestment of land?—I am afraid that that is so, and the reason is that these lands which have been turned into forest were absolutely unlettable. I will not, of course, mention names, but a friend of mine turned a farm of his into a forest, and I said to him very much what I have just said to the Commission,—that I thought it was a pity. He told me that he had advertised the farm for two years, and could not let it; it was out of lease, and if he took over the stock himself it would cost him £10,000, and he did not know where to turn to raise the money. He said he could not find the £10,000, and did not know where to borrow it; and he could not manage the stock even if he got it; so as the place was absolutely unlettable, he was obliged to turn it into forest.

51,870. At the same time, I think I may take it that your sympathy and your feelings are against this additional afforestment of land, if it could be stayed in any way?—Most distinctly.

51,871. Are you aware that there are proposals for further afforestment of land under consideration at the present moment on some estates?—I believe that to be so.

51,872. Whether to be carried out or not, remains to be seen. Now, you referred particularly to congested districts; you know, of course, that in some of the Western Islands there are very seriously congested districts?—Unfortunately, that is too true.

51,873. And you admit, I daresay, that the land question there, if I may so express it, is at present in an acute form?—It is so, and has been for some years, —for the last ten or twelve years.

51,874. It is, indeed, gradually becoming worse instead of better, from the over-population in certain localities?—I believe that in the island of Lewis, the population is increasing very rapidly.

51,875. It was the island of Lewis I had particularly in view. I think your paper suggests that if reasonable and feasible means could be devised for the relief of that congestion by some process of migration, it would be well to make an experiment in that direction?—No one would be better pleased than myself if that could be done.

51,876. And you would be in favour of such an experiment, assuming that it could be carried out on reasonable lines, rather than emigration?—Subject to the conditions mentioned in my memorandum, I should be very much in favour of such an experiment. In the concluding portion of my statement, I suggested that that should be undertaken by the Government, which, I think, is a very fair proposal; but as to comparing it with emigration, I really would not like to give an opinion, because emigration must depend so entirely for its success or failure upon the individual inclination of the man who goes. Nobody suggests compulsory emigration, but if a man wishes to go to New Zealand or Canada, I don't know why he should not go if he likes. I think you can hardly compare the one thing with the other; they are two separate things.

51,877. I have not read your memorandum quite recently, though I did before, and therefore I ask you to what extent do you propose co-operation on the part of the landlord?—The proposal was, so far as I remember, that he should have the selection of the tenants: that one-sixth of the capital sum required to establish the crofter should be found by the crofter, but that it might be found partly in money, and partly in labour, such as building his house: and that the other five-sixths should be provided by Government loan, for the payment of interest on which the landlord should be responsible.

Inverness. — Donald Cameron.

51,878. And is that mentioned in your memorandum?—Yes, I think it is. In that way, I would throw upon the landlord the onus of safeguarding the Government, and in return for that, I would give him a voice in the selection of the tenants.

51,879. You are aware that in Lewis there are very many who could not be expected to find even so small a proportion of the capital required as one-sixth; they are in a state of a chronic poverty?—I am afraid that in the case of the cottars in Lewis, they could not pay anything at all.

51,880. And even some of the crofters there are in what appears to be a very serious state?—They are very poor; but my idea was that probably the crofter must have some stock, and although it might not be sufficient for a £30 holding, yet he would move that stock, and it would represent perhaps part of the £100 that I contemplated. But as regards the cottar, I did not contemplate any contribution at all from him.

51,881. You are aware, of course, that the cottar question in Lewis is a very serious one?—I am aware of that. But the difficulty is as to the stock of the cottars.

51,882. Some of the cottars have stock, but very many of them have no stock?—Yes, that is so.

51,883. Mr Sutherland.—The statement you have made, Lochiel, is practically and in substance the memorandum which we find attached to the Report by Lord Napier's Commission?—Well, substantially,—I adhere to that memorandum, subject to the altered conditions in regard to prices. I am afraid that times are not now so favourable as when I wrote that memorandum, and the difficulties in the way of carrying out my ideas would be certainly somewhat increased.

51,884. You found yourself able to sign the general report of that Commission, notwithstanding this memorandum?—No, I did not sign the land portion of the report; the portion containing Lord Napier's land proposals I could not sign.

51,885. Is your name not adhibited to the general report?—Yes, but the general report embraced other things besides; it deals with postal communications, and railway schemes, and deer forests, and other things.

51,886. But, I think, you admitted in your statement here to-day that in your memorandum you traversed the principal and essential part of the general report?—Yes; that was intended, otherwise I should not have written the memorandum separately.

51,887. I need not ask, therefore, whether you were in favour of the legislation that followed upon that report,—I may take it for granted that you did not look with favour on the subsequent legislation?—That is going back to what is past; I am rather looking forward to the future.

51,888. But I wish to define exactly your position with regard to our inquiry?—I was not in Parliament when the Crofters Act was passed.

51,889. I was under a misapprehension, then; I thought you were, and I was going to ask you how you voted in regard to that measure?—No, I was not in Parliament at the time.

51,890. But is it an unfair way to state your position, that you were not favourable to the legislation that succeeded upon that report?—Well, I do not exactly feel disposed to give my own private views upon the legislation which has passed. I think that the Crofters Act contains some things which are good, and also same things which I should like to see different.

51,891. You stated, Lochiel, that no one was more willing to give small holdings, if it could be done with benefit to the crofters and loss to nobody,—I presume to the landlord and the present tenants of the land that might be given. May I ask as a practical question, do you see no way to its being done without much loss to any person?—Well, when you say do I see no way in which it can be done without loss, it depends what you mean by 'it;' there are so many different ways of settling crofters upon the land. There are some lands which are suitable for crofters: those lands I referred to, and the lands which I consider suitable for crofters might, I think, be given to them in the way suggested in my memorandum. The real difficulty lies in the matter of providing the stock; that is the crux of the whole matter. I do not believe that many proprietors would refuse to give lands at a fair rent to crofters which are now occupied either as sheep farms or as deer forests, if they saw their way to do it with a possibility of the crofters being in a position [however willing they might be] to pay their rents when the time came round. But the difficulty of the stock is an immense one, and I should be only too glad if I saw my way out of it, but I don't.

Inverness. — Donald Cameron.

51,892. Have new small holdings been formed to any extent before now?—I believe some experiments have been made, and I am afraid they have not been very successful, in Skye; I do not know them personally, but I have been told so.

51,893. How were the present crofters, whom we find up and down through the country, located first in the places we now find them?—I suppose they have been there for a great many years.

51,894. Yes, but they had a commencement, a beginning?—Everybody had a commencement; that is going back into the dim past.

51,895. What was done in the past might be done in the present, or in the future. They were placed upon new holdings without any stock; how do the present holdings come to be?—I suppose they were gradually increased,—first a small patch, and then a gradual increase in the usual way. I suppose the whole country of England and Scotland was originally what you call a virgin forest, or prairie, or something, and I fancy holdings in the Highlands would not differ in that respect from what was found in other parts of the country.

51,896. It points to a system of natural development of holdings,—small patches to begin with, aided by the natural increase of stock, and the reclamation of land?—Probably, and when the crofter found he had got as much as he wanted, he stopped improving.

51,897. Could what was done then not be done now?—Times are so changed now.

51,898. There is no change in the natural increase of stock?—Change in the manner of living, and the comforts of life. You could not expect crofters to put themselves into the position they were in a hundred years ago, and why should you?

51,899. I do not enter into that question,—I perhaps may be found to agree with you in that; but stock will increase as naturally as it did before, and my point is that what was done before can surely be done again. Is not that a reasonable assumption?—It is obvious that it could, if you choose to go through the same hardships and sufferings and discomforts, and to put yourself back as you were a hundred years ago. There is no doubt the land can be ploughed, but how is the crofter to live while he is doing it?

51,900. But there would be this essential difference, I take it, that in any experiment that might be made now, the people should be put upon the best land, not upon the worst, as before. Would not that make a most material difference?—I understood the idea was to put them on the lands they had before.

51,901. Which they say is the best land?—In some cases it may be, and in some cases it may not be. But, of course, it is perfectly true. I quite agree with you that if you think it is desirable, or if it is thought desirable, to put crofters on a spot of ground, and say, now cultivate that for yourself, and let them alone, of course it can be done; but the question is, would the crofter go on those conditions?

51,902. We have his own evidence on that point?—He would not go and pay £30 of rent for it.

51,903. The rent would be subject to arrangement, of course?—I assume that the land is worth £30 now to a farmer or some one else.

51,904. Then in continuation of that same subject, you took for granted that Parliament would not give money for such a purpose, and you founded an argument upon their refusal. It is within your own experience as a Member of Parliament, I presume, that there is a great disinclination on the part of the Imperial Exchequer to give money for any local purpose?—Yes, there is a disinclination; but the money is somehow screwed out of them in the long run, I think.

51,905. And do you not think that money for this purpose might also be screwed out of them in the long run?—No, I don't think so, because there is no security for it at all.

51,906. Have you not seen subventions in relief of local taxation considerably increased in your day?—Yes, but they have got the security of the rates for that.

51,907. But there is no security required; the money is not returned at all; it is a free gift?—That is another thing; I never contemplated a free gift.

51,908. But if Parliament give a free gift, much more might they give a loan that would be repaid with interest?—No, I think not; I think it would be much better to give a free gift than a loan that they may never get any return for. I think you are more likely to get a gift than a loan, certainly.

51,909. Is that your experience of the Treasury?—You put it to me as a comparison with gifts to public bodies. My answer is that it is possible that by dint of successful pressure on the part of members of Parliament, you might perhaps get the Government to give the crofters a gift of money to enable them to stock their lands. It might be done,—I should think it is extremely improbable, but it might be done as a gift; but, as a matter of business, and as a loan, I do not think that any pressure could ever obtain it from the Chancellor of the Exchequer in that shape, because of the trouble there would be in getting the interest on the money, and the little likelihood there would be of ever getting back the principal. That, in my opinion, would prevent such a thing ever being thought of in Parliament.

51,910. But you surely forget your own proposal, Lochiel, that the landlord should become security for such an advance. Is he not a good enough security?—No. In the first place, the landlord is better security than the tenant, I should think, because he has got the land.

51,911. That, then, would overcome the objection? If the landlord were made security for the money, it would surely be perfectly good?—But then you put it to me that the money should be lent to the crofter, and not to the landlord.

51,912. For the purposes of the crofter?—That makes the whole difference.

51,913. It could be safely given as a gift, and it could be safely given as a loan to the landlord but not to the crofter?—If it is given as a gift, there is no question of safety; but if it is given as a loan, then, I say, it is safer to lend it through the landlord, because he has the security of the land.

51,914. Then, it is your deliberate opinion that the money could be more easily got as a gift than as a loan?—No, I don't believe it could be got either way. As you put it to me, I said that was the likelier way of the two; but I don't think it would be an easy matter to get it at all.

51,915. Is that the only alternative for an advance,—to the landlord direct, or to the landlord for the crofter? Have you never thought of a public representative body?—No, I don't think I have. But I don't see how a public representative body would be any better off in the way of getting security than the Government; it would simply throw the possible loss from the Government to the representative body.

51,916. You think it would be a loss in any case?—It would be a loss in any case.

51,917. If that is your opinion, of course, your position is quite intelligible. You said, if I remember aright, that it would be necessary for a man to have a capital of £200 in order to stock a holding?—A capital of £600.

51,918. But for sheep alone?—For sheep alone,—yes, £200.

51,919. And £600 altogether?—And £600 besides the sheep, I am afraid.

51,920. But in the case of holdings such as we see already formed, I suppose the people who began them had not anything like £200 altogether?—No, I should not think they had anything at all.

Inverness. — Donald Cameron.

59,921. And yet they pay high rents now,—higher than the big farmer?—I imagine that the people who have stock now, got stock from their predecessors, who in turn got it from their predecessors, and so on. There is no difficulty there: the man is on the farm, and he has got his stock; if he does not meet with any misfortune he keeps his stock, and pays his rent from the produce of his stock.

51,922. I refer rather to places with which you must be perfectly familiar, places throughout the Highlands where the people were put off land and had to sell off their stock and begin the world afresh and anew; they had not £200 of capital altogether, or anything like it?—I suppose they had the value of their stock.

51,923. Whatever it fetched?—Whatever it fetched.

51,924. And no more?—I suppose not; I would think not.

51,925. And they now pay sufficient rents,—rents which, on the whole, have been considerably reduced by the Crofters Commission?—I thought you were referring to people who were evicted.

51,926. Yes, quite so?—But if they were evicted, there was an end of them, they had no more rents to pay.

51,927. But they had to begin life somewhere again?—I suppose they had.

51,928. And yet they now pay considerable rents for their holdings?—Whom do you mean by 'they'?

51,929. The crofters who were evicted.—But the crofters if evicted went away, and left.

51,930. But those who did not? Some of them are there still; others were evicted or transferred to new places, and these had to make new homes after they were evicted?—Are you referring to cases like what are called the Sutherland evictions, where they went away from a glen and down to the sea coast; is that what you refer to?

51,931. Yes.—And what is it you wish to ask me about them?

51,932. You stated in your evidence that the great obstacle to the formation of new holdings was that the people had not sufficient stock. I refer you to cases where the people had to begin making new holdings under adverse conditions, who had no capital of £200, and were not asked to produce it, and who yet have made new holdings, and new holdings for which they now pay a high rent?—But if the crofters who were removed from one part of the estate to another were allowed to take their stock with them, the initial difficulty of stocking would be removed. In the case you suggest, no difficulty would occur, because the people would go over the glen to the sea coast, or wherever it was, with their stock.

51,933. As a matter of fact, in the new holdings they had no land for their stock, and they had to dispose of their stock under the most unfavourable conditions?—Then they got out of the difficulty altogether; the difficulty is to get stock, and if you say they required no stock, the difficulty vanishes.

51,934. It is an easy way to get out of difficulties, to dispose of stock?—I am not at all justifying it; I am merely answering your point.

51,935. My questions, as you will understand, are directed to the point that you have, I think, exaggerated the difficulties of forming new holdings, unconsciously, no doubt; I do not for a moment suggest that you consciously over-estimate them. But I am pointing to the fact that the difficulties were overcome before, under the most unfavourable conditions; and why should they not be overcome again, if any re-distribution of the land is made, seeing the people would be much more favourably situated?—But the difficulty of the stocking in the case you point at could not have occurred, because if the new holdings required very little or no stock, that difficulty no longer exists.

51,936. Stock was got sufficient for the holding, in the state in which it then was?—That would be a portion of the old stock, I suppose; and the rest would be sold at the market price.

51,937. Yes.—Then, again the difficulty of stocking the new ground, which required fewer cattle and sheep, disappeared, because they took a portion of the old stock of cattle and sheep, and only sold what they did not require.

51,938. And they have increased the stock, and paid higher rents, gradually, ever since?—They may or may not; I cannot answer as to that; it is the stocking difficulty that I wish particularly to refer to.

51,939. The proposal in your memorandum, and your proposal to-day, is that the landlord should have the selection of the tenant; that the tenant himself should pay one-sixth of the necessary capital, and the State should provide the remaining five-sixths; that is to say, the tenant and the State between them were to have all the money to pay, and the landlord was to have the patronage?—He was to have the selection of the tenants.

51,940. Do you consider that is a fair arrangement to all parties concerned?—I think it is very fair, because the landlord has to incur all the risk of the tenant's misfortune, or inability to pay, and in return for that I think he should have some voice in the selection of the tenants.

51,941. And do you think that the very great power of selecting the tenant should be left in his hands, and the capital provided by other parties, because he undertakes that risk?—And because he knows best the circumstances of the tenants, and who are most likely to prove capable farmers. He must know better than any other person who are the best people on his estate.

51,942. He must know that best?—I think so.

51,943. And you see no objection to such a patronage as that being put in the hands of a private individual?—No, I do not see any objection at all.

51,944. And do you think that Parliament would be inclined to look favourably on such a proposal as that?—I really do not know what Parliament might do.

51,945. You have told us very decidedly already to-day what Parliament would do.—The weak point in the scheme, I am afraid, is that instead of having to exercise this patronage so largely, the landlord would have some difficulty in finding a sufficient number of people qualified to occupy the land, who would satisfy the requirements. That would be owing to this same old story of the stock.

51,946. Supposing the matter was vested in a public body like the Parish Council, or the District Committee of the County Council, could not they take the same part as the landlord?—No, I do not think so. I do not think they would have the same opportunity of judging of the character of the tenants as the landlord.

51,947. In the statement which you made here to-day, you were kind enough to submit for our consideration recommendations of a general character. You, no doubt, are aware of the exact scope of our inquiry?—Yes, I have seen the terms of the reference.

51,948. And you have taken for granted that we are going to make general recommendations?—I have taken for granted that you will make some recommendations, certainly; but I don't know what you mean by 'general recommendations.'

51,949. You say you know the scope of the reference laid down in the Royal Warrant?—Yes, as to what places crofters could be established on profitably. [The Chairman.—Or advantageously.]—Or advantageously.

51,950. And you have been good enough to give us evidence. You have changed your mind, evidently, with regard to this Commission, since its appointment?—I have changed my mind? No. How do you mean?

51,951. We have had the benefit of some attention from you at the time of the appointment of this Commission, have we not?—In what way?

51,952. At a meeting held in this town?—Oh, a meeting of landlords; yes.

Inverness. — Donald Cameron.

51,953. At that time, you had some doubts whether you would appear before us and give us evidence at all?—On the contrary, I suggested at that meeting that it would be very desirable that the landlords should not ignore the Commission, but do their best to assist it.

51,954. You had some doubts in your mind as to recognising the Commission at all?—No, I never had any doubts.

51,955. My recollection of your position on that occasion is that you had?—No. I criticised the composition of the Commission: but I should hardly think that is a subject that it is desirable to go into now.

51,956. It is the only opportunity we will have of asking you any questions about it. I understood you had grave doubts at that time as to whether the Queen's Commission ought to be recognised?—No, I never had any such doubts. I distinctly remember that at that meeting I criticised the composition of the Commission, as I had a perfect right to do; and I perhaps blamed the Ministry for appointing that Commission, or for the formation of it; but I never held that the Commission should be ignored.

51,957. I may be misinformed, and I would be very glad to know that I have been misinformed; but as reported here, you ask the question 'Are we to 'recognise the Commission, and give it assistance in 'the task which lies before it?' And that implies a doubt in your mind as to whether you ought to recognise the Commission?—No, it implies no doubt at all. It is a question put to my brother landlords, on which they have a right to express an opinion as well as myself. My opinion was distinctly that we ought to recognise the Commission; I said so, and they followed my advice.

51,958. The sentence I have quoted, then, is wrongly reported?—Not at all.

51,959. No doubt ever entered into your mind as to the recognition of the Queen's Commission?—In my mind, never. I always intended that it should be recognised, and I would recommend my brother landlords to recognise it; and it was with that intention that I called the meeting, in order that I might recommend them to acknowledge the Commission, and tender evidence.

51,960. My recollection of it was that the meeting was influenced by the sound and sensible advice of The Mackintosh, that they should act towards the Commission just as they would towards any other of Her Majesty's subjects?—That was my view too.

51,961. I am glad of it; you must have been misreported.

51,962. Mr Forsyth.—In giving your evidence, Lochiel, as to the possibility of the formation of new holdings, you made some mention as to the selection of suitable people for emigration, but when it came to the question of migration, I did not hear any view from you. By migration, I mean either the bringing of tenants from a congested district to a place where there might be room, or simply the formation of new holdings. Now, can you give us any assistance or advice as to the method of selection of tenants for new holdings?—My answer to that question is very simple. Assuming that a crofter has a good character, and so on, it would depend entirely on his ability to provide stock for the new holding. That would be the first and the most essential element, in my opinion, because that is the great difficulty in the whole question.

51,963. The difficulty that I see before me at the moment is this; that one man may succeed well in a newly formed holding, while another man from the same district (say a congested district) might fail; and it would be a very important matter that there should be some proper selection of suitable tenants for a scheme such as that which you have shadowed forth. How would you propose to meet that? Simply as a question of the capability to stock?—The question of the capability to stock is the main thing to be considered; and, of course, whoever had the selection of the tenants would require to see that a certain number of people would go together. I mean that, if possible, it would be desirable to take crofters and cottars from places where they were accustomed to live together, where they were acquainted with each other, so that they should work harmoniously upon the new holdings; not to take one man from one village, and put him down beside a stranger from another, where the same harmony could not be expected to prevail as if they were all brought from the one township. That, I think, would be an element of some importance in the selection.

51,964. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—You made some observations with regard to the evidence led before us at Fort-William, and I would like to refer to that first of all. Now, were you not represented, Lochiel, at our Fort-William sitting?—I was represented, yes.

51,966. But still you think it is necessary for you to come here and combat what was led before us then?—I have already explained, in asking the Chairman's leave to deal with that matter, that my reason was that facts, most of which I have alluded to, could not be known to my factor, and, therefore, I wished to supplement. There is that matter about the sheep, for instance.

51,967. But does your factor not know very well about your estate, and is he not a very able lawyer?—He may be a very able lawyer, but he would not know anything about those particular matters that I have referred to.

51,968. Would he not know everything about the estate management?—No, he lives at Fort-William, and would not know anything about it.

51,969. That is not very far from your estate, is it?—Yes, but he does not know all about my sheep arrangements.

51,970. Then, I was very sorry to hear your reflections upon your old tenant, Mr Macmillan, whose letter was read to us at Fort-William. You stated that he had not the courage to come before us?—Yes.

51,971. Do you think that that is altogether fair towards an absent man, to accuse him of want of courage?—I think it is just as fair as writing a letter of that character against an absent man who is his landlord, and who has never done him any harm.

51,972. But think of this, Lochiel; did he ask that letter to be read? Was it his motion at all that it should have been read?—Mr Macphee stated that he had permission to read it.

51,973. That he asked permission: that shows that the letter was not sent there at his own motion?—But it was sent; and for what purpose could it have been sent?

51,974. It was a correspondence between himself and Mr Macphee: in fact, Mr Macmillan said he had no thought when he wrote it that it was to appear before us, and he only gave permission that it should be read after he was asked by Mr Macphee to do so, seeing he could not appear himself?—On the face of it, if that letter was not intended for the Commission, I cannot imagine for what purpose it was written.

51,975. But he states distinctly himself that it was not written for that purpose?—Well, I should think Mr Macphee and Mr Macmillan would have something else in the world to do than to write a correspondence of that kind for their own private amusement, and not for your benefit.

51,976. Do you think that letters written upon that important subject can only be regarded as written for amusement?—Well, for their own private interest.

51,977. Might it not be important enough, although it should not be for this Commission?—My impression is that that letter was written for the purpose of being shown to the Commission or read before the Commission; I cannot conceive for what other purpose it was written. Whether the idea originated with Mr Macmillan or with Mr Macphee I cannot say, but the letter was written evidently for the Commission; no person reading it could think otherwise for one moment.

51,978. Was it not written rather for information to Mr Macphee himself in reply to a letter? Was it not for Mr Macphee?—But it contained no information at all, except an attack upon me about the sheep.

51,979. Did it not say that he had reclaimed land?—The second letter said something about reclaiming land, but I could not follow what he meant by that.

51,980. He was willing to point that out to us, and anxious that we should see the reclamations. Now, you also make another reflection on this gentleman, who, you say, has one of the best farms on your estate, that he wrote the letter to safeguard his own interests there, that the only reason you can imagine for his writing the letter was that, thinking of the parable of the unjust judge, he thought it would be well to pose as the crofters' friend, in order that his farm might not be taken for crofters?—It looks very like it.

51,981. Is it very generous to impute such a motive as that?—It is just as generous as his writing this letter about me.

51,982. But supposing him to be the most ungenerous person that could be, should we attribute such motives to him?—That is a moral question, on which you are more capable of giving an opinion than I am.

51,983. Well, my opinion is that it is very ungenerous to attribute such motives, if you think I am an authority upon that.—Well, perhaps I was wrong; I will absolutely withdraw any imputation of that kind. I cannot do more than that.

51,984. Now, with regard to the evidence which Mr Macphee gave us about Glen-Dessary, he did not profess to have gone through or to have seen the land himself?—No, he said no.

51,985. But from what he had heard about it, and from what he had read about it, he thought it would be suitable for new holdings. That was his evidence, and he did not seek to deceive us in any way in regard to it?—No, I never said he sought to deceive you; what I said was that he admitted he had never been at Glen-Dessary, and then he lays down the law about the holdings as from his own opinion, as if he had been there; and I said that was not consistent. He spoke of the ground as only one could speak who knew it from personal acquaintance.

51,986. But you can speak of many lands that you may not have seen?—Well, hardly in giving evidence before this Commission.

51,987. But this is what he says according to you:—'I should say generally with regard to Loch-Arkaig 'and the other lands on the Lochiel estate, that they 'are admirably suited for maintaining a large number 'of additional holdings.'—That is a very dogmatic statement to make, and if it had been based on personal knowledge might have been quite right; but as he admitted he never was there, I do not think the statement is worth much. That is all I want to say; I have no wish to accuse Mr Macphee of any wilful mis-statement, but I think I have shown that his statement cannot be worth much.

51,988. The evidence here shows quite well the lines upon which Mr Macphee was proceeding, for it goes on to say that Mr Macphee then read a statement from the rental previously referred to giving the tenants on Lochiel's estate, a century ago. Is it not fair enough to conclude that if the land was occupied in former times, it might be occupied again? Is there not some force in that?—Oh, Mr Macphee had a perfect right to the opinion; I don't dispute his right to the opinion; what I dispute is the weight that should be attached to it by the Commission, considering that he admitted he had never been on the lands he was talking about.

51,989. Then, with regard to Glen-Dessary, you say that he fell into the mistake of saying that it was a deer forest, whereas?—Whereas, it has never been a deer forest, and is not now.

51,990. Is it surrounded by a deer forest?—Not surrounded; there is a deer forest in the neighbourhood.

51,991. And, I suppose, there are deer on it?—Yes, deer traverse it, as you would say, occasionally.

51,992. And deer are shot there, I suppose?—No, as a matter of fact, they are not.

51,993. They are not shot there at all?—No.

51,994. If the deer are there, why is the ground not shot over?—Because it is so inaccessible that nobody can get at it. That is the real fact of the matter. It is a long way to it.

51,995. Is there not a road to it?—There is only a road for two miles up.

51,996. Is that the only reason why it is not shot?—There is nobody lives near it to get at the shooting; my tenant at Achnacarry has a right of shooting over it if he likes.

51,997. Would it not be quite correct to say that it is a sanctuary for deer?—It cannot be a sanctuary for the deer, because it is occupied by sheep, and shepherds are going over it constantly.

51,998. But a sanctuary would be a place where the deer are never shot, never troubled?—This is certainly not a sanctuary.

51,999. But it is in the neighbourhood of your deer forest, which is shot over; there are numerous deer there which are never troubled in any way, and what is that but a sanctuary for the deer?—You cannot call a sheep farm a sanctuary for the deer, because your shepherds are constantly traversing the place, and the deer can have no rest. A sanctuary implies peace and rest for the deer, and they cannot get that if the shepherds are continually going over a place.

52,000. You have just said it is very inaccessible; is it not then the very ideal of a sanctuary?—But people do pass through it; my shepherds pass through it going to their sheep.

52,001. But with that exception, is it not very admirably suited, in your point of view, for a sanctuary?—That is a very large exception.

52,002. Then, with regard to the statement which you read before the Crofters Commission, and which you referred to to-day, you made a point of the fact that it was read before two able lawyers, who appeared in the interests of the crofters, and that only one question, I think you said, was asked in cross-examination on it. So, I suppose, you wish us to receive it as a statement which cannot be in any way invalidated?—No, I do not wish you to receive it as a statement that cannot be in any way invalidated, but I use that as an argument to show, that if I had been at Fort-William, present at your sitting and able to contradict some of the statements that were made there, very likely the statements would not have been made.

52,003. But I refer to your statement before the Crofters Commission; you said you were only cross-examined on one particular point?—Yes, that is so.

52,004. And you referred to the two lawyers being present on behalf of the crofters, from which we are to conclude, of course, that you could not be examined, in fact, on the remainder,—that it was to be received as undoubted fact?—Well, I cannot fathom their minds: they did not do it, that is all I say.

52,005. Then, with regard to the crofts on your estate, you say that the rents have not been raised, and that the people hold the same land that they had from the very commencement; there has been no curtailment, I think you say, and no increase of rent, but there has been consolidation, of course?—Yes.

52,006. I state the matter correctly, do I not?—Yes, that is so.

52,007. The number of crofters has been reduced very considerably?—The number of crofters has been reduced, yes; by the process of consolidation.

52,008. They have been consolidated at the expense of the crofter holdings; why was nothing done to increase them from the large farms which you hold, or would it not be advantageous that that should have been done?—It would have been advantageous neither to the crofter nor to the farmer; you cannot take a slice out of a farm and add it to a croft: why should you?

52,009. Supposing you took the whole farm, and shifted some crofters to that farm, might not that be an advantageous experiment?—But why should I make the experiment? What is the reason for making the experiment? The consolidation that you speak of took place when there was a vacancy; instead of a small vacant croft being given to a new comer, it was added to an existing croft. In that case, the occasion arose for the change; but if you suggest that I should add part of a farm to a croft, the occasion does not arise at all.

52,010. Is it not practicable sometimes to increase holdings from a large farm when it becomes vacant?—But why should a holding be increased if there was no opportunity?

52,011. But there is opportunity, when a large farm becomes vacant?—Oh, if a large farm of say £300 or £400 is vacant, is it not the natural thing to let it to another farmer? Why should I go out of my way to take a crofter from another place, and put him on to that farm? What is the object of it? I do not quite see what you should do it for.

52,012. Could you not extend the holdings of the present crofters from such a farm?—The whole position on my estate is that there is no congestion of population; the crofts are all large and labour is abundant, and there is no need or demand for extension. The extension has, in fact, taken place through a series of many years as crofts were vacated; but as for extension, such as is suggested in Skye, or Lewis, or elsewhere, the case is quite different: there is no demand for it here.

52,013. But you have some small crofts, have you not?—Yes, I have some small crofts.

52,014. £1 crofts?—Yes, I have a few £1 crofts still.

52,015. Large farms are not very successful just now, but you have never tried an experiment of turning these into small holdings, although the small holding's system has been so successful on your estate?—No, I have never suggested to any of these small holders with one cow, to go on to a farm that carries five or six thousand sheep, certainly.

52,016. Then with regard to the curtailment of the crofter holdings, do you state to us that there has been no curtailment at all? The townships that were represented before the Crofters Commission were, I think, Banavie and Corpach; do you say that there was no curtailment of their lands?—Well, no serious curtailment of their lands; and no lands have been taken from any of my crofters to add to sheep farms.

52,017. Is it not a virtual curtailment when you put say a few additional crofters into an existing township and give these a share in the common? Has there been no instance of that?—Putting a few crofters among whom?

52,018. For instance, at Banavie-Bridge, were two or three crofts formed there, and did these crofters get a share in the common?—I cannot recollect of that; I cannot answer that. I said 'on a large scale'; I cannot tell you off-hand without books of reference, about every individual crofter. On a large scale, I maintain that no crofts have been added to sheep farms.

52,019. You limit it in that way to a large scale, but still it might be a serious enough thing for them. Then, in regard to Ballachulish, a number of crofts have been extinguished there, have they not?—In the Ballachulish case what happened was this: there was an hotel there, which had no proper arable ground, and the hotel-keeper was very anxious to get some arable land. There were four or five crofters, who were mostly old people, and who voluntarily gave up their holdings, they being allowed to remain in the houses they occupied. For the most part they were not able to work their crofts, and these holdings were given up by them and added to the hotel. There were only four or five small crofts altogether.

52,020. We had distinct evidence at Fort-William that at least ten holdings were taken, from time to time, and given to the hotel for a farm?—In any case, the matter was one of voluntary arrangement, and no one was prejudiced by it.

52,021. That was a case where land was added to an hotel, not to neighbouring crofters; and the extinction of ten or eleven crofts is surely not a very small thing?—I maintain that there were not ten or eleven.

52,022. I only say that that is the evidence which we distinctly had at Fort-William, and that your own factor was there, and was not in a position to contradict that evidence?—My impression was that the witness started by saying twenty, then came down to four or five, and eventually admitted that there were none.

52,023. No, sir, that was not the evidence; it was never admitted that there was no addition made.—That there were no evictions, in the ordinary sense of the word.

52,024. I am not speaking of evictions; I did not use the word. I am speaking of crofter holdings to the number of eleven being added to the hotel farm?—Well, I believe four or five were added.

52,025. Then was any land taken from crofters and added to the distillery at Fort-William?—The distillery is not on my land at all; it is on Lord Abinger's.

52,026. Is there no distillery on your property?—No.

52,027. Then you represent to us that the crofters on your estate have been treated in a very generous and fatherly manner; but with regard to these two townships, did you hear of their having been fined for heather burning?—Oh, yes, I heard of that.

52,029. That may be; but you referred to the statement which you made there; is it the case that these crofters were to blame for the burning for which they were fined?—The crofters were 'fined,' if you choose to call it a fine; it was rather damages.

52,030. I will take any word you may suggest.—The crofters paid the damage done by excessive heather burning, exactly in the same way as the farmers in their leases by voluntary consent pay for the damage when excessive heather is burnt.

52,031. But the question is this; did these crofters burn that heather?—Certainly, they burnt it.

52,032. Have you any proof that they burnt it?—Certainly, they burnt it, or somebody burnt it for them.

52,033. But do you think it is fair to fine the crofters for what 'somebody' did?—But if it was done for their benefit, by their own shepherd.

52,034. Is it for their own benefit to excessively burn?—I believe they got two wintering rents that year for the ground. It certainly did bring up the grass in rather an extraordinary way.

52,035. Then you fined them for what improved the land?—I made them pay up a great deal less than the damage that was caused to me; I could not let the shooting on that ground for three years, for anything like the rent I got before.

52,036. But if it improved the ground, would it not in the long run improve also the grouse shooting?—In the long run; but while it was running, I was losing rent all the time.

52,037. But seeing that it improved the land for grazing, would it not also improve it for grouse?—I am quite aware of that.

52,038. Now, consider the fine that was paid,—£50 for two years, and £25 for another; that is as bad as an increase of rent, is it not?—No, I don't think it was as bad as increasing the rent: I think many people would be glad to pay rent for two years, and get their farms free for the rest of their lives.

52,039. I wonder at that, because it appears to me to be in some ways worse than an increase of rent?—As a matter of fact, they only paid one year's rent; they were let off the other two.

52,040. They hold themselves that they paid two?—I am under the impression it was one. Anyhow, it was a very small portion of the loss which I suffered; that is all I have to say.

52,041. They had to pay, at any rate, for this improvement of their land?—For the destruction of my property.

52,042. Which you never brought home to the real culprit; you wished to recover it from somebody because you lost it?—I lost it, for their benefit.

52,043. Why not punish the real culprit, if there was any damage done?—But they were the real culprits.

52,044. That was never proved?—Well, we did not prove it in a court of law, but, as a matter of fact, it was perfectly well recognised.

52,045. By whom?—By everybody.

52,046. Who are 'everybody'?—Well, the crofters, and myself, and everybody else.

52,047. They did not admit it?—They knew perfectly well it was done for their benefit.

52,048. How did they know it?—Because it was done by their shepherds.

52,049. Why not punish the shepherds if you knew that, or if you could prove it?—I leave you to answer that question yourself.

52,050. Then you speak of the hogg wintering as if that were a benefit which the crofters obtained without any outlay or labour on their own part. Do you think it is fair so to represent it?—I think so.

52,051. Do they not get a rent for wintering, because they cultivate their land?—No.

52,052. Is it not so? How then is it that the farmers do not keep the hoggs on their own land?—Because they cannot; their own lands won't keep them.

52,053. They send them to places which are cultivated, because the grazing there is better?—They send them to places which are partly cultivated and partly hill, but the hoggs spend most of the time on the hill. It is because the country to which they send them is low and is suitable for wintering sheep; and they run over the fields too.

52,054. But you overlook the fact of the benefit to that land from the crofters' cultivation?—The benefit to the grazing?

52,055. Yes?—Of course, the crofter cultivates his fields, but he pays me rent for the whole,—for the hill and for the cultivated land. Before the system of wintering hoggs was introduced, the crofter got nothing but what he produced out of the soil: now he cultivates his land in the same way, there is no more labour on his part, but by means of hogg wintering he gets one-third of his rent back.

52,056. He gets one-third of his rent back?—Well, practically,—one-third or one-fourth or something like that, from the farmers who send their sheep there.

52,057. It is one of the ways in which they are enabled to pay their rents; and it is a thing for which they work; it is the reward of their own labour, for if they did not cultivate, they would not have hogg wintering?—Of course they would not. But they cultivated it before hogg wintering was introduced, and this return is extra,—it is all additional. That is my point.

52,058. But the point which I wish to put before you is that that is one of the benefits of small holdings—that they make the ground valuable for sheep wintering?—If it is in a suitable part of the country, and has a suitable climate, and does not stand too high.

52,059. And do you say it is not the result of labour, of good husbandry? Of course, if there was not labour and good husbandry there would be no hogg wintering. Then, in the statement which you submitted to the Crofters Commission, you paint the benefits enjoyed by the crofters in very glowing colours. Would it not be advisable now to extend that system, which has worked so beautifully there?—To extend what system?

52,060. The system of crofting. You say, for instance:—'If, therefore, the crofter on this estate 'is better off than (1) agricultural labourers elsewhere, '(2) artisans in large towns, and (3) crofters in the 'remoter parts of the Highlands, it is difficult to 'discover in any part of the United Kingdom a spot 'where the corresponding class among the Queen's 'subjects enjoy the same advantages and are equally 'free from the ordinary anxieties of life.' It is a perfect Elysium, apparently. Now, would it not be well in that district to extend the system of crofting, which is so happy and so prosperous?—Do you mean to extend the system to existing crofters?

52,061–2. To introduce new ones. You take pity on the poor people at Fort-William; is not this a chance for them?—You spoil the whole thing if you introduce too many crofters, because that labour value which is one of the principal elements would disappear; and the crofters themselves would be the first to object to new people being brought in among them.

52,063. But Fort-William is in the district now, and you take pity on the people of Fort-William, and show us how very much better off the crofters are. You say 'Without going out of Lochaber a startling 'comparison can be found between the position of a 'labourer living in Fort-William, and one of my 'crofters, who may possibly be found engaged in the 'very same employment. Thus for £5 a year, a crofter 'gets a house, four or five acres of arable land, and 'grazing for two cows: for the same rent, his fellow-'workman has the privilege of occupying two small 'rooms in a back street in Fort-William,' and you then go on to say that you know cases of the very same thing. Now, in the case of the two brothers you refer to, one of whom is a crofter, and the other in Fort-William, would it not be desirable to try and do something for the Fort-William brother?—I daresay it would be very nice for him, but I don't think it is my business to find out everybody who lives in a certain degree of hardship in Fort-William, and plant them among my own crofters.

52,064. Don't plant them among your own crofters, but take some of the large farms and settle them there?—No, I don't think I am called upon in the least to do it.

52,065. I don't say you are called upon to do it, but I only point out to you this, that your representation here is an argument in favour of extending the crofter system. There are large farms near Fort-William; you have plenty people in Fort-William who have no land, and who would be much better off, according to your own representations, if they had crofts such as exist on your estate at present. It is a very strong argument, is it not, for making an attempt to do something for Fort-William?—The Fort-William people are taking uncommonly good care of themselves just now. With the opening of the West Highland Railway, money is pouring in there by the sackful, and I don't think they want you or me or anyone else to help them.

52,066. You yourself speak of them, and speak of them disparagingly?—No, I don't speak of them disparagingly; I speak disparagingly of the accommodation they have, and of the miserable rooms they have.

52,067. But you have farms in the neighbourhood that might be experimented upon in that way. Do you think now that that comparison between the rent which is paid for a house in Fort-William and the rent which is paid for a croft is altogether fair, or that the inference which you seek to draw from it is a fair inference?—Yes, I think so.

52,068. In the case of the house at Fort-William, the proprietor who receives the rent has built the house, and is bound to keep it in repair?—Yes.

52,069. Now, with regard to the crofter, some of these crofters at Corpach are, I suppose, descendants of those who were removed from Glen-Dessary?—Yes, some of them.

52,070. They came there, and settled on a peat moss?—I don't know what it was; I was not alive at that time.

52,071. But you can see that it is a peat moss?—No, I do not at all admit that it is a peat moss.

52,072. Are they not on the Corpach moss, in reality? There is no use denying what any person can see.—No, they are not on the Corpach moss.

52,073. The land was not worth much when they came there?—I cannot answer that question.

52,074. But it is perfectly obvious to anyone that the land could not be much worth when they got it?—How could anybody know what it is worth?

52,075. You can see the land about them, and that is not much worth. You have the Corpach moss there, and people can judge from what they see with their own eyes?—Corpach moss lies by itself; it is an absolutely flat surface. These crofters, however, are situated along the slope of the hill, with the exception of those who are situated along the side of Loch-Lochy.

52,076. Have you any idea of the value of the land, when the crofters were settled there?—No.

52,077. Have you reason to suppose that it was worth more than a shilling an acre?—Some of it is probably worth a shilling an acre, and some worth more; and some very likely less.

52,078. And did these people not build their own houses?—That I do not know; I should think they very likely did.

52,079. Surely you cannot compare a rent paid by a man who built his own house, with a rent paid by a man living in a house which was built for him?—The comparison was not made in that way at all the comparison was made to show that a man who has a house and two cows, and the right of wintering or grazing sheep, is in a superior position, as a matter of fact, and independently of what the landlord did or does, to another man who is living in a small room in a back street in Fort-William. It is the fact of the superiority that I pointed to, it has nothing to do with the origin of the croft, or the liabilities of the landlord.

52,080. And the conclusion from that, of course, would be that you ought to try and get more of these. But I want also to see whether it is not fair enough to charge less on people who have reclaimed the land, who have built the houses, who have erected the fences, and who have virtually put all the value into the place that it now possesses. Is it not fair that these people should be charged a lower rent?—Well, the Commissioner before whom all that was discussed will probably form his own opinion as to what was done.

52,081. But it is not fair, Lochiel, to rent people upon their own improvements?—It is generally considered not fair.

52,082. So that it is no wonder to find that these crofts are low-rented, considering all that the crofters have done to improve the crofts?—The present crofters did not do much; it was their great-grandfathers, if anybody.

52,083. Your great point is that the rents of your crofters were not raised. But you also expressed the opinion that when the matter should come before the Crofters Commission the rents would be raised. Has that prophecy of yours been realised?—As a matter of fact, the decisions of the Commissioner have practically left the rents where they were, if you omit certain cases where rents were undoubtedly high, and where I offered before the arrival of the Commission to reduce them, which offer was refused; and if you also omit certain other cases where I have deemed it my duty in consequence of erroneous information to appeal to the three Commissioners.

52,084. I think you say that in a few cases where the rents were thought to be higher than the run of the neighbouring crofts, a re-valuation was offered, and declined. You do not take notice that they are too high, but that they are 'higher than the remainder.' 'The remainder of the applicants, will, I venture to 'think, find their rents raised by the Commissioners.' Have these rents been raised by the Commissioners?—No, they have not; I was wrong in my forecast.

52,085. Can you tell us by what rate per cent. they have been lowered, on the whole?—Really I have only seen the newspaper account, and I think the figure there given was 13 or 14 per cent.,—which, I believe, is lower than almost any other case dealt with; except the Sutherland estates.

52,086. I may be wrong, but I had a conversation with an official on your own estate, and I got it from him as 20 per cent.?—I don't think it is as much as that: I am sure it is not. But if you wish to ask me about that matter, I would repeat what I said just now, —that if you deduct from those decisions of Mr Hosack's the cases of crofts which were undoubtedly high, and which have been reduced far more than 20 per cent.,—perhaps 30, 40 or 50 per cent. and deduct also, as I have a right to do, those still under appeal, the rest of the crofts have merely a few shillings of addition.

52,087. Have some of the rents been lowered 30 or 40 per cent.?—In some of the cases where I had already offered to lower the rents before the Commission came. If you deduct these—

52,088. Why should we deduct these?—Because I think it is only fair to deduct them.

52,089. What I wish to point out is that my information is that the rents were reduced about 20 per cent. altogether.—Including those that were under appeal?

52,090. Yes. Is it not 20 per cent.?—No, I don't think it is as much.

52,091. Well, I only point out to you that I have that from an official on your estate, that the reduction on the whole was about 20 per cent. However, some of the cases, you say, are under appeal; who is it that has appealed?—Well, nobody has appealed as yet, but I intend to appeal, in a few cases.

52,092. May I now direct your attention to a correspondence which you had with the crofters who appeared before you to get relief from their grievances. You say in reply to them:—'Every one must judge for 'himself, and no one can bind another. Should you 'or any one of your friends take this course,'—i.e., to come before the Commission,—'I shall not complain, 'nor throw any obstacle in your way. I shall look 'upon the decision of the Commission as fair and 'equitable, in just the same way as I would on the 'decision of valuators appointed by myself.' And still you have appealed?—The Commissioners have not given their decision yet. One member of the Commission has given his decision, but I have a right to appeal, and in certain cases where I think the information brought before Mr Hosack was not correct, I intend to appeal. When the Commission as a whole have given their decision, then that sentence which you have read will apply.

52,093. It will; but I would point out to you that after appearing before one branch of the Commission, you are putting them to the trouble of appearing again before the whole Commission, and that, after expressing yourself so confidently that you will accept the Commissioners' decision. Then with regard to crofters on your own estate, you say that they have built new houses, &c., and that this 'shows that on this estate, 'at any rate, the smaller tenants enjoy a perfect sense 'of security, both from the fear of eviction and con- 'fiscation of their property, as well as from the possi- 'bility of having their rents raised in consequence of 'these improvements.' So that it is your opinion that without such a feeling of security, no improvements would go on?—No, I don't say that at all; but I think a person is more likely to build a house for himself when he feels he is not going to be evicted.

52,094. You attribute it to that, you know?—Yes, in a great measure.

52,095. For you say 'that shows that they had a 'perfect sense of security'?—Certainly.

52,096. The natural conclusion from that is that without such security, no improvements would be made?—Without that security, not so many improvements would be made.

52,097. That will account for the inferior houses on other estates where they do not have that sense of security?—No, I don't think that accounts for it, by any means; it is the want of money. They are better off in my part of the world than in Skye or Lewis, or these other places; they have more labour, and they are enabled to accumulate money and to build houses. How can a crofter in Lewis or in Skye build houses? It is impossible.

52,098. But has not the security of tenure produced the same effect in Skye?—I have not been in Skye lately.

52,099. It has also produced the same effect in Tiree?—I am delighted to hear it.

52,100. I would direct your attention, for instance, to the Third Annual Report on the health and sanitary condition of the county of Argyll, by Dr Roger Macneill, in which he says:—'In the district of Mull 'great improvement has been carried out in the im- 'provement of dwelling-houses in the island of Tiree. 'During the past three years about thirty houses have 'been almost entirely rebuilt. This has been volun- 'tarily done by the crofters, cottars, and others, on the 'strength of the security afforded under the Crofters 'Act.'—That rather tallies with my views.

52,101. I take it it is in perfect accordance with you, and I would point out the benefits which have arisen from extending that security to other places and that it has that effect in the poorer places as well as in the more favoured districts of Lochaber. Then with reference to the paper which you have read on deer forests before us to-day, you say that you have not been in favour of more afforestment, and one of the reasons which you give is the present position of public opinion,—not because further afforestment would be an injury, but because public opinion would be against it. Is not that in your statement?—Yes, that is so.

52,102. You would bow to public opinion, whether right or wrong, in a matter of that kind?—I think, as I have stated already twice, that it is not desirable, except in very special circumstances, to add to the number of deer forests.

52,103. Don't you think that this public opinion that has been formed against it is well-founded?—No certainly not. If I were to say it was well-founded, you would have out every thing that I had ever said and prove that I was wrong. I cannot possibly say that.

52,104. I admit that you have always defended it, and you only give in now because public opinion is against you?—I don't think that is very illegitimate.

52,105. Mr Sutherland was asking you about the difficulties under which crofters made their holdings in the past, and that without having the money which you now think is necessary, for setting up new holdings. You know that crofters have actually begun life upon very inferior land, have improved the land, stocked it, and built houses?—Yes.

52,106. In the period of distress in the Highlands in 1843, for example, many of them were removed from the holdings which they had on better lands, to make way for sheep; when they had fallen into arrear on account of the bad times, they were removed to very unsuitable places, and still without any security for the labour they spent upon it, and the money they invested they made homes for themselves. Now, don't you think that with the very much more favourable position in which they are placed, with security of tenure, they would be quite as able now to make homes for themselves in the lands that are now under pasture and under deer?—They could make homes for themselves, but they could not afford to take the land at what would be fixed at a fair rent, which rent the land now yields. Many years must elapse while they are making this home, and how can they afford to pay a fair rent for the farm during the process of improving the land and increasing their stock?

52,107. But don't you see, Lochiel, that the large farms do not pay just now: you get nothing at all for them,—the very large farms,—so that a fair rent would not be very high just now, if they were divided among crofters?—You cannot get crofters to take such a farm. The class of farm which I say is so large as to be unlettable, I maintain it is impossible to get crofters to take; and if you only take small portions of a farm, that does no good at all.

52,108. I would like to know why you think they would not occupy these large farms?—How are the crofters to graze farms of 3000 sheep, such as I mentioned in my statement? Cattle cannot graze on these farms; the crofters must have sheep.

52,109. We are told that cattle graze much higher than sheep?—That is a mistake.

52,110. I think it is in Mr Malcolm's statement about deer forests that cattle grazed higher than sheep. [Mr Malcolm.—No, not cattle].—They do not occupy the land as sheep do: they occupy a portion of the land, but not the whole, and they cannot stay on the hill in winter, as the sheep do.

52,111. Why should not crofters occupy these hills as a club farm?—Because they have not got the money to stock it.

52,112. That is the great obstacle, then?—Of course it is the great obstacle, certainly.

52,113. And if that were got over, do you think it quite possible that the lands could be advantageously occupied by crofters?—If that could be got over, and a fair rent fixed, the whole difficulty would be solved.

52,114. Mr Munro.—Lochiel, you have been a considerable time under examination already, and I am sorry to detain you for one or two minutes.—Pray don't apologize; I am at your service.

52,115. Your opinion is well worth having on the points that I wish to put before you. In addition to being proprietor of your estates, you have had considerable experience in sheep farming, I think?—I have.

52,116. During the past few years I understand that a considerable number of farms have fallen into your own hands?—They have.

52,117. Now, I have no right to pry into your private affairs, but if you have no objection to inform us what has been the result of your experiments in that direction we should be very glad to hear it.—I have no objection to tell you, to the best of my ability, as far as I can without reference to documents. In good years such as we had three or four years ago, I paid my rent, and, of course, my expenses; and in a very good year I have made as much, I think, as 2½ per cent. on the large capital which was invested. In bad years such as last year, and the year before, I think you won't ask me to tell what happened.

52,118. That is, that on some of your farms, after debiting yourself, I presume, with the rent which the previous tenant paid, and paying all expenses, you have realised about 2½ per cent. on the investment?—I have done as much as that.

52,119. But upon the sheep farms you took into your own hands at a later period, you have not been so successful, I suppose?—No; the last farm I took, I am afraid, has not been a very great success; but, of course, we do not like to reduce the rent in the Valuation Roll,—it always looks bad; otherwise I should reduce my own rent, I think.

52,120. And, I presume, Lochiel, that that applies to farms which other proprietors, as well as you, have taken into their own hands in recent years?—That is so; but with the exception of Macleod of Macleod, I do not think many proprietors have taken to sheep farming on the same large scale as I have. I began it at an early age, and it is a subject of interest to me. I happen to be blest with a most able and faithful manager, the most faithful servant a man could possibly have, and some very good shepherds; and I think if it had not been for that, I would not have come through so well as I have.

52,121. Does not the result of your experiments in taking large sheep farms into your hands recently point to the advisability of in future dividing these farms into smaller holdings?—Well, no, I cannot say that with regard to sheep farms. I find that when you asked me first of all about the profits on sheep farming, I ought to have said that although I have not found it profitable as a farmer, I have as a proprietor. If these farms which I now have in hand had been divided into five or six farms, they would still have been large farms, and I know quite well that at the end of every break in the leases I should have been expected to do something to the buildings. The buildings cost a very great deal in repair; the fanks fall into disuse; very often farmers like to have more sheep draining done than perhaps the proprietor cares to effect; and there are all sorts of improvements. Fencing is now a very prominent feature in sheep farming. All these things would be made matter of bargain in renewing leases with tenants. I got rid of all that, because I simply keep up the buildings required for the shepherd, and where a fank tumbles down, of course it is replaced; but the outlay is not at all heavy, and it is therein that I reap the benefit,—not as a farmer but as a proprietor, in having very few houses to look after.

Inverness. — Donald Cameron.

52,122. But the question of erecting suitable buildings for small holdings is only a matter of accounting, and if that difficulty could be got over, I think you would be disposed to admit that it would be advisable to have many of the larger class of farms divided into smaller holdings?—I was referring just now not to £30 holdings, but to farms of moderate size. Of course, the case of £30 holdings is quite a different matter, because there the idea is that the house and buildings should be erected and maintained by the tenant, he getting compensation on leaving. Then, of course, the proprietor would lose nothing; he would not be liable for the buildings, which would be kept up by the tenants, and the rent would, I presume, be fixed in accordance with that principle. The proprietor would not be the loser to the same extent; the crofters on my estate really cost me very little indeed, because they keep their own houses in order.

52,123. I am not confining myself to holdings within the limit of £30; by small holdings, I mean farms of £50, £60, up to £100, and I think you indicated in the statement with which you favoured the Commission to-day that there was a much greater probability of a man succeeding in a farm of that sort, where he wrought himself with the assistance of his family, than a man with a larger holding would have?—I said the man was more willing to take a farm even when prices were low and there was not much chance of his getting any great return from it, on account of the smaller capital required to enter upon it.

52,124. In your note to the Report of Lord Napier's Commission, you submitted some scheme for advancing money to crofters, to enable them to take enlarged holdings, but, I think, you made it a condition there that they should hold the land on lease, a thirty years' lease?—Yes, I think so.

52,125. You say on p. 132 'That the new tenants 'shall be taken from the estate belonging to the 'proprietor, and that their holdings, if vacated, shall be 'partitioned among or apportioned among or allotted 'to the remaining crofters in the same township; that 'leases of thirty years be granted to the tenants in a 'new township, and that their holdings shall be of not 'less value than £30 yearly rent,' and then you go on to propose a scheme of advancing £600 to enable crofters to acquire such holdings, £500 of which should be provided by the State, and the remaining £100 by the tenant?—Yes.

52,127. Now, Lochiel, is not that condition occasionally attended with some disadvantages, allowing the landlord to have the sole choice of the tenants?—Well, I think, as I said before, that if the landlord is made responsible for the punctual payment of the liabilities of the tenant, he must have a voice in the selection. There might be disadvantages in that, and I daresay there are; there are a great many disadvantages, I am afraid, in any scheme connected with the establishment of crofters in such places.

52,128. I do not for a moment suggest that you would do it yourself, Lochiel, but have you never known a case where a landlord wished to get rid of a tenant for political reasons, or refused to give him land because he did not agree with him in politics?—But he need not agree with him by giving him land on his estate.

52,129. Have you never known of a case where a landlord wished to get rid of a tenant?—I never knew of a case, but I have heard of it—I never heard of a case, but I have no doubt that there are cases. Is that in connection with new holdings?

52,130. I will put the question to you in this way. Giving the landlord the sole choice of a tenant is occasionally attended with some disadvantages. He would very naturally prefer a man who would agree with him on political and social questions, is not that so in many cases?—Not in this case, I think, because suppose the man were a Conservative: if he took away a Conservative tenant from an existing township and put him on another township, the man would still be a Conservative and have his vote, and I do not see how the landlord could gain by it. I quite admit it is possible for favour to be shown to persons who share your own political views, in the same way that people who are Conservatives may sometimes be found to employ Conservative bakers and butchers, and Liberals to employ Liberal bakers and butchers; but in this case I don't see how it would apply.

52,131. I will illustrate the point in this manner. I have myself seen a letter from the Commissioner on a certain large estate in Scotland, written in reply to an application for a farm, containing these words: '—I think it right to add that his Grace will not give 'a farm to a man who is a Radical in politics.' I have seen that letter myself, and I can tell you privately, Lochiel, who the letter came from?—Thank you, but I don't want to know. I could make several guesses about that, but if you will allow me to say so, I quite admit all that is possible, but I do not see how it applies in the case of my proposal in the memorandum, to shift a Conservative voter from one township to another, because he would retain his vote, and have still the same influence as before; and whether he voted in one place or in another would not matter.

52,132. Passing now from that point to the question of the advance of money to crofters to enable them to stock their holdings: you are aware, no doubt, that the State has in past years and very recently advanced very considerable sums of money for purposes of emigration, and I have no doubt you will also admit that those schemes have sometimes been of very questionable success, if not attended with disastrous failure?—I have not gone into the question of disastrous failures, but I am aware that emigration schemes have been promoted by the aid of Government money.

52,133. Now, if so much money has been employed in sending people out of the country, don't you think that it might with advantage be employed to keep them in the country, by some well-devised scheme?—I decidedly think so, and I think that very likely there would not be any difficulty in regard to borrowing money on favourable terms for the purpose of creating new holdings. But, as I said before, that can only affect improvements in buildings, and I am afraid it cannot affect stock. I draw a great distinction between permanent improvements which remain in the land and have a value which can be taken possession of by a creditor, and stock which may be sold off by the tenant, or may be carried off by disease; you cannot make stock into a good security.

52,134. But supposing a scheme were devised to enable crofters to purchase their crofts, would your objections then apply?—That would not get over the difficulty about the stock, would it? I am all in favour of purchasing; I am all in favour of having terminable payments, with the result of the whole croft being handed over at the end of the thirty or thirty-five years to the tenant; but I cannot get over the difficulty of the stock.

52,135. Your objection there applies under the law as it at present stands; but supposing some change in the law were devised by which a crofter could hypothecate his stock in part security for the redemption of a loan, would you then be disposed to welcome the change?—If that can be done, my difficulty vanishes, but I do not see how any law could possibly be passed by which that arrangement could be brought into force. Who is to look after the stock? How can you hypothecate stock which may be here to-day and away to-morrow? How can you prevent a man from selling more than the proper cast of his sheep we will say every year, or mortgaging his stock privately, or even disposing of it? How can you prevent the stock dying from disease, or from the effects of a long and coarse winter?

52,136. I merely wish to get your opinion on the point?—I wish I could give a favourable opinion, but I cannot honestly. Inverness. — Donald Cameron.

52,137. You do not believe in giving money as an absolute gift?—I believe very much in it; I have strong faith in that. I do not know whether the Chancellor of the Exchequer would look at it in the same light, however.

52,138. Don't you think that would have a tendency to pauperise the crofters?—I don't think it is worth discussing; it is so unlikely that I hardly think it is worth discussing as a matter of possibility.

52,139. The matter was suggested by yourself in the previous part of your examination, and that is why I referred to it.—Yes, that is so, but I am afraid that gifts of that kind are not likely to come from Government.

52,140. I don't think any evictions took place on your property in your time?—No.

52,141. You never evicted any tenant?—No.

52,142. You are no doubt aware, Lochiel, that considerable discontent exists among the crofters and other small tenants in the Highlands at this moment; have you any remedy to suggest by which this discontent could be removed?—One of the honourable Commissioners was asking me a question just now about the condition of the people in Lochaber, and suggested that it must be a paradise, or an Elysium. That perhaps may be somewhat of an exaggeration, but still the people there are in a very comfortable position; what I would like to see is other parts of the Highlands equally comfortable, and made, if possible, more like the crofters and others with us; and I think that can be done only in two ways, independently of this land question. One is, by giving them an opportunity of finding labour,—providing labour for them, and good wages. The other is by consolidating crofts, so as to make them a little larger; and then the only difficulty which would remain would be with regard to the cottars and squatters. Cottars and squatters, so far as my observation went, in Skye and in the Lewis, constitute the great difficulty of the problem in the Highlands, and I am sure I do not know how I can help you about them; I don't know what can be done with them. Of course, the more you can open up the country by means of railways, and thus induce them to go to the south or to other places where they get a chance, the better it will be for them. Bringing work to their doors by means of railways would do them good. Leaving out of view the land question, that is the only way in which you can improve the condition of the poor people in the Highlands,—by giving them an opportunity of earning good wages for their labour, and that can be done by developing the country by means of railway communication.

52,143. In your note to Lord Napier's Commission Report, you use these words, and the sentiment embodied in it does you credit:—'The end of a good 'proprietor in managing his estate is not simply to 'increase its rental, but to add to the prosperity of 'his tenantry, to augment their means, and to raise 'their social status.' I suppose you still adhere to that opinion?—Yes.

52,144. As forming the proper basis to come to an agreement between landlord and tenant?—Certainly.

52,145. You are the bearer of a historic name, Lochiel, and in Inverness here we are always in the habit of associating that name with everything that is brave and chivalrous. Keeping that in view, may I ask you this question; would you be disposed to welcome any well-devised scheme whereby not only your estate, but other estates in the Highlands, might be peopled with a more numerous tenantry than at present, provided it could be done with advantage to themselves and without great detriment to the landlords?—I would be disposed to welcome any scheme which I was convinced would be really beneficial to the people themselves, and which could be carried out without injustice not only to proprietors but to other classes of the community. As I have mentioned in my statement, I have very great sympathy with the people who want land and who cannot get land; but there are difficulties in the way of giving people land who are, you may say, penniless, which it is impossible to overlook. There is no use going about saying this ought to be done, and that ought to be done, and I would like to see this done, and I would like to see the other thing done: if you know yourself from your own experience that there are difficulties in the way which are, I won't say insurmountable, but very difficult to surmount, those difficulties must be faced; and it was with the view, or in the hope, that I might in some humble way make some suggestion to the Commission that I came here to-day. But I admit that I have not advanced myself much,—I confess I do not see my way to get over the difficulty about the stocking: but I am willing to answer any more questions or suggestions. I wish very much that I could fall in with your views.

52,146. Mr Macleod.—I think in answer to a question by Mr Sutherland you stated that you never took the view that this Commission should not be recognised?—No, I always thought it should; that was my own opinion.

52,147. But I think you did say that "there was a great deal to be said in favour of that course?"—I really do not remember the exact words I used, but I am perfectly certain that my opinion was what I have stated.

52,148. These are the words that you used, as reported in the public prints. I do not ask whether you modify that opinion or not, but I will call your attention to another statement that was made by you upon the same occasion. You there say that "no good 'can be derived from breaking up or dividing these 'farms and forests among the poorest class in our com-'munity." Are you still of that opinion?—The whole bulk of my opinion is that while I am anxious that the crofters and cottars should be benefited, I think there are difficulties in the way: and saying that is practically the same as what you have quoted,—'no 'good.'

52,149. You say "no good" can be derived from breaking up and dividing these farms. With regard to the question of stocking, which I take it is one of your chief difficulties for dividing the large sheep runs that we have in the Highlands, I don't know whether you are aware that in our Colonies there are methods taken by which stock can be hypothecated for advances?—Where?

52,150. In some of our Colonies?—Yes, I understand that that prevails where the land and the stock belong to the same person.

52,151. Admitted that, take the case of a farm where it would be possible to arrange the sheep stock so that it could be held in common, don't you think that in a case like that it would be possible to put a particular mark upon the sheep, and that by legislation it could be made illegal for the tenants to remove any of the stock except at stated times and in certain numbers?—Well, if you were to find the skin of a sheep with a mark upon him, I am afraid that would not be much satisfaction to the person who lent the money,—the skin instead of the sheep. What I mean is that the sheep might die.

52,152. To that extent, of course, it would not be as good a security as houses or other improvements of that kind, but you will admit that the difficulty might be got over so long as the sheep is alive?—It would involve a system of branding which would be somewhat inconvenient for a large number of small holdings.

52,153. But I am assuming that the sheep stock of these holdings would be held in common?—Yes.

52,154. I do not see that there would be any greater difficulty in marking sheep in the way I have indicated than there is in any large farmer at the present time distinguishing his sheep from his neighbour's?—It might possibly be worked in that way, but I doubt whether it would not involve more trouble and more expense than perhaps you contemplate. It would require a Government official to mark the sheep,—it would be like branding a cask of herring.

52,155. It would be quite possible to devise some machinery,—I don't say a Government official, but some machinery for the purpose I have indicated?—Yes, you could mark the sheep, but I don't know how you would prevent them from being sold at the wrong time, and at a wrong age.

52,156. But if you made that an offence, you would have every security and precaution?—Well, I am afraid you would increase the number of offences very largely.

52,157. I am sorry to hear you expressing a poor opinion of the people.—I am not expressing a poor opinion; but if a man should have some sheep ready to be sold, and another one that is too young, he may think I will just sell it along with those; I don't think it is any great crime; he may think he will make it up by keeping a lamb or two the next year. But I do not regard it as a system which any practical man would consider as feasible.

52,158. There was a statement made before the Napier Commission by an official very high in the confidence of the Sutherland estate management, in which he expressed himself in favour of some such scheme as I have indicated?—Yes, I remember that.

52,159. He, I think, was a practical man?—Yes, but I remember discussing that with Lord Napier and the other members of that Commission, and we came to the conclusion that it was not feasible in this country. Lord Napier himself took a great interest in the subject, and we discussed it very fully among ourselves. Of course, I could not without referring to my notes give you the reasons for the conclusions we arrived at, but I know that with every disposition to view that gentleman's proposal favourably, we found that it was unworkable in this country, where the land and the stock did not belong to the same individual.

52,160. I only referred to it to-day because you appeared to think that the proposal had not been made by any practical man?—Yes, I recollect it perfectly.

52,161. Then, also in regard to this matter of stocking, you stated that you did not think it was worth considering the possibility of obtaining an absolute gift from the Exchequer of a certain sum to aid in the direction in which this inquiry points. Might I point to the case of a very rich corporation in our midst, the Highland Railway Coy., which has received an absolute gift of £45,000 for the extension of a railway. Might it not be that Parliament, in its wisdom, might also see its way to give some assistance towards re-peopling those farms which admittedly are unlettable at the present time?—Yes, but I think, as I already stated, that Parliament would be more willing to deal liberally in regard to every other feature in the scheme, with the exception of the stock. I think Parliament would say: in order to form a holding, you require so much capital; stock forms one item, improvements and buildings form another item. We, Parliament, will consent to assist you in regard to permanent buildings, but we cannot give the man both his stock-in-trade and his farm, besides being at the expense of putting up the buildings. I think I said in my statement that that would involve a very important principle, and might not other poor people who live in towns come to Parliament also for their stock-in-trade. I may say that I have conversed with many gentlemen whose political opinions I do not share,—who are called advanced Liberals or extreme Radicals, and I have not yet met any one who favoured the idea, even amongst the extremest of them.

52,162. Of course, it has to be borne in view that we have been discussing the poorest classes of the community,—those who are utterly unable to help themselves; but there are a number of men who state that they are prepared to take holdings and that they have the necessary capital for doing so. That, at any rate, has been the evidence that has been laid before us. Whilst there is undoubtedly a very large class who could not take advantage of small holdings, supposing these were placed at their disposal, there is also a considerable number who could do so. In the case of these people, who are able to stock themselves, you think there would be no difficulty?—No, but I am afraid the number is more limited than is commonly supposed; the people who have money in the 'old stocking' are not very numerous throughout the districts with which I am familiar. We must look at the thing perhaps a little outside of the point from which you and I are apt to regard it. We are Highlanders, and we are naturally anxious that money, whether for a railway, or to stock holdings, should be brought into this country; and we are apt to sympathise with and commiserate people who are poor, and wish that they should be raised to a better position: but, of course, there are other members of the community who are not Highlanders, and we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that when you come to deal with this sort of question in Parliament, you will find the representatives of the larger towns saying that within their municipal boundaries there are a vast number of poor people who really have perhaps no home to go to, and who don't know where to find their next meal,—these people, it may be urged, are in even a worse position than our people. You may depend upon it that these gentlemen will draw public attention to the wants of their own communities; and that is why I think perhaps I am not doing an ill service to a Commission like this sitting in public and occupying a very responsible position, when I call their attention to what is sure to be said on the other side. It would certainly be said that if you go to Parliament and get money to help to provide a stock-in-trade, that would form a precedent for doing the same in other cases.

52,163. But don't you think it would weigh very much with those representatives of other communities, that instead of sending our people to compete with them in towns, we were endeavouring to keep them at home, and promote trade and industry among ourselves?—Yes, but I scarcely think that would be a compensating advantage.

52,164. What I was directing your attention to in my previous question was the fact that there are undoubtedly a certain number of individuals who have come before us on their own behalf and on behalf of others, who have stated that they are prepared to stock holdings of a suitable description for small tenants, and to put up the necessary buildings. In their case, of course, you would have no difficulty?—No, the difficulty would disappear. I am very glad to hear that that is so. I mentioned in my statement that I was not aware what evidence had been brought before you, and I am delighted to hear what you now tell me. Before the Napier Commission I am sorry to say that we found the case very different; I think almost the preponderating evidence was to the effect that there was no money among the people wherewith to stock land.

52,165. Then as I understand your position, you would not be opposed to any legislation which would make it more easy for those who are in a position to take up these holdings with money of their own,—you would rather favour legislation of that character?—Yes, I would favour any legislation which I was convinced would do the crofter good, and could be effected without injuring any other classes in the community.

52,166. In the calculations which you stated were contained in your memorandum,—we need not refer to them particularly now, but you were taking, of course, what you would consider the maximum holding?—I took the £30 holding, as that seems to be the popular one.

52,167. Well, that is the maximum crofter holding at the present time?—Yes.

52,168. That being the case, your figures deal with the most difficult case that you could put before us?—But I was under the impression that a £30 holding was the minimum that is aimed at, the holding that is considered most advisable.

52,169. But, of course, you can quite imagine circumstances where a man would be paying a lower rent than £30, and yet have a self-sustaining holding?—No, if new holdings are created, I did not contemplate a new holding on a farm or forest, of less than £30 of rent.

52,170. I need not ask you then if you are in favour of the system which obtains on your own estate, of crofter holdings of £6,—you think them too small?—Too small to be self-sustaining, certainly; but such a crofter on my estate lives by means of labour outside his croft.

52,171. Then you would be in favour of the same size of crofts for crofters who would live partly by fishing?—Yes, that would work well enough, I think; certainly where there is any labour obtainable, whether fishing, or working on a railway, or any other local labour, a crofter can do with a small croft, but if you put him in a remote glen, he must have a self-supporting croft, and I think a £30 holding is little enough, in that view.

52,172. Supposing the question of stock and buildings were got over, what, in your opinion, is the minimum rent that should be paid for a small pastoral farm?—I think the minimum rent should be double that; but there is no use suggesting the minimum rent, because if you have that difficulty with a £30 holding, you would have double the difficulty with a £60 holding.

52,173. In your memorandum, you favour improving leases of considerable duration?—Yes, thirty years' duration.

52,174. I suppose that I may take it that after the experience we have had of the working of the Crofters Act in the Highlands, you would be quite in favour of the same tenure as is laid down in that Act, for any crofter holdings that might be contemplated?—I think that if the fair rent is fixed, everything else would be laid down absolutely, and no question would arise until the lease came to an end, if it was a lease; but what I am most in favour of is that these holdings should be created, the land reclaimed and trenched, and the buildings erected, if it is to be done at all, by a loan guaranteed by Government, terminable in so many years, after which the land would be the property of the crofter tenant.

52,175. You are, in fact, in favour of peasant proprietorship?—Yes, done in that way.

52,176. The Chairman.—There is one other matter to which I would like to direct your attention, and on which I would like to get your opinion if you can give us it. There was a very important proposal made by a very eminent public man in the year 1887; his suggestions appeared in the Scottish Highlander of 21st July of that year, and the material parts of the proposal were as follows:—That the Crofters Commission should report from time to time, and declare to be 'congested districts' any townships or groups of townships, or any parish in any of the above named counties [the counties with which we are dealing], in which in consequence of over-population, coupled with the absence of other suitable means of earning a livelihood, the land at present occupied by crofters and cottars is generally insufficient to secure to them a satisfactory subsistence. [I omit everything except what is material to the present inquiry]. In the next place, the Commission are directed to examine into the accuracy of the statement contained in the application, and if satisfied of its truth, and especially (first), that the applicant is willing and able to pay a fair rent, (second), that he is able properly to cultivate the arable land, and stock the pasture land for which he has applied, (third), that the applicant and his family may be expected to derive a fair subsistence from the cultivation of the land applied for, the Commissioners may assign to the applicant a holding on lands purchased by them as hereafter provided at a fair rent, and on such terms and conditions as they may think just. The new holdings are to be not less than 12 nor more than 50 acres arable, with proportionate pasture; the fair rent to be 4 per cent. on the apportioned cost of the holding, and after forty-nine years, the holding to become the property of the tenant subject to certain conditions. To carry out these proposals, the further suggestion is that the Treasury be authorised to issue to the Commission a sum not exceeding £1,000,000 sterling, in payment of estates purchased under the preceding proposals, such sum to bear interest at the rate of 3½ per cent., and to be repaid by a sinking fund in forty-nine years. Now, I daresay you have had your attention called to these proposals before,—probably you noticed them at the time; and they found their way into the public prints in 1887. Do these proposals meet with your approval?—I may say that my attention had not been drawn to these proposals before, but I quite follow them from your reading. They are most excellent proposals, no doubt, but I am afraid the limitations imposed are so great as to render the success of the experiment problematical. The limitations there are very considerable, and I doubt whether any crofter could take advantage of the proposals, hampered by these conditions. It appears to me that these limitations are more strict than those contained in the Act which was passed to enable the Crofters Commission to assign land on application by tenants.

52,177. There is no doubt that these limitations are to some extent taken from the Crofters Act, and to some extent go further?—Yes; I doubt if they would be workable.

52,178. You do not think that is a scheme which would be likely to solve the difficulty which exists?—No, I think not. I think the limitations are too considerable. In the statement which I have made, I lay down certain conditions, but they are not so strict as those. I rather incline to adhere to my own conditions.

52,179. You know, of course, to whom I refer?—No, I do not. [Reads name on slip handed by Chairman]. I should hardly regard him as an authority on the subject.

52,180. I said a very eminent public man. May I ask whether you were in Parliament in 1885?—I left in the spring of that year; I left before the General Election which took place in November 1885, on the extension of the Franchise.

52,181. There was a Crofters Bill in 1885, which did not become an Act, and I rather think it contained a proposal for advancing money to purchase stock for new holdings, on the security of the land. Do you recollect that Bill?—No; whose name was on the back of it?

52,182. It was a Government Bill; I think it was introduced by the present Secretary for Scotland?—I do not remember about it.

52,183. Mr Sutherland.—With reference to the advancing of money to purchase stock, if the Chairman's impression is correct about this Bill, is it not evident that the Lord Advocate, speaking for the Government of the day, thought the security of tenure that was to be given to the crofter was a sufficient security for the advance of money to him?—I take that for granted, or he would not have introduced the Bill.

52,184. But is the situation not changed now, by the fixity and security of tenure which the crofter enjoys under the Crofters Act?—No, I don't think that makes much difference.

52,185. You are, of course, familiar with the tenure of land in Australia?—No, I am not.

52,186. Are you aware that most of the land in Australia is held on long lease, subject to a land tax?—My attention was called to-day to the statement made before Lord Napier's Commission by a certain witness, and I remember perfectly well that it was stated at that time that the difference between that country and this was that there the owner of the land was also the owner of the stock, which made the matter of an advance easier to deal with.

52,187. But you are aware that under the Act of 1886, the crofter is made to a certain extent the proprietor of his land?—Well, no; there are conditions which he must fulfil.

52,188. But the conditions being fulfilled, his security is permanent,—he is always there?—His security is better, no doubt, but I doubt whether a money-lender would look upon him in the same light as an absolute owner. He is a conditional owner, not an absolute owner.

52,189. But he is in a better position as a subject for security than he was before the passing of the Act?—If he has carried out improvements which are available,—e.g., if he has built a house which the landlord is responsible for taking over at valuation; if he has left any permanent improvement on the place, which cannot be carried away, then, of course, his security is better.

52,190. But a crofter having undertaken a responsibility would have less reason to make himself scarce now, if he were called upon to meet that responsibility, than formerly?—Oh, no; I don't think so. If a man wishes to make himself scarce, he will make himself scarce, and he won't care whether he has got fixity of tenure or not.

52,191. Is the holding not worth a great deal more to him now than before?—No, only in respect of any permanent improvements. That is the only additional security you have.

52,192. I am not exactly sure about the position of the stock-holder in Australia, whether he is also owner of the land; I rather think he is a leaseholder; of course, there are a great many men who are both owners and occupiers?—There are two classes of stock-owners in Australia,—there are what are called squatters, and there are free selectors. As far as I can make out, squatters are the people who have the largest holdings.

52,193. And they hold on lease, subject to a land-tax?—They hold on lease, and the others are owners of the land; I don't know which is which, but one is the owner of the land, and the other is a leaseholder.

52,194. And, as a matter of fact, there is no difference made between them as regards advances?—I cannot say as to that.

52,195. Can you give us the acreage of the land that is at present in your own occupation on your estate?—Yes, I daresay I could.

52,196. I only want an approximate idea?—I should think perhaps 80,000 acres.

52,197. Part of it is sheep run, and part deer forest?—No, it is under sheep. I should think I may have more than 80,000,—I never can quite make up the acreage, because if I add the acreage under deer and the acreage under sheep I get a great deal more than is given in the blue-book for the whole estate altogether. I always reckon it as so many sheep to the acre, and multiplying that by the number of sheep gives me the acreage.

52,198. And also so many deer to the acre?—No, I cannot say as to that.

52,199. I was going to ask you a question about part of the forest known as Achnasaul on Loch-Arkaig; is it the fact that some of your sheep are wintered there?—Yes, some of my gimmers go there.

52,200. So that land which is devoted to deer does winter sheep?—It does winter two-year old sheep, but I don't think it would be worth anything to any one else in the community.

52,201. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—About the condition of the crofters in your district, Lochiel, I described them as being in a kind of Elysium, and you somewhat objected to that. Now, what is your own description of it?—No, I don't object to it; I am rather pleased to hear it.

52,202. But it is very important, I think, to get your own description of their condition, and I would like to get it on record in this Commission. I will just read what you say about their condition:—'In 'short, the whole appearance of the country is changed 'so much that, on this side of the Atlantic, I hardly 'think any other rural parish can furnish an example

'to be at all compared with what has been done in 'so short a time.' Then you say further:—'The 'crofter therefore in this district is in a far more 'favourable position than an ordinary agricultural 'labourer in the south, because while receiving equal, 'and in many cases higher wages, he has a home 'to fall back upon, which supplies him with most of the 'necessaries of life—in case of loss of employment or 'temporary illness. The labourer in the south has to 'buy almost everything he requires,—milk, potatoes, 'and coals. The crofter here has almost always two, 'sometimes four, or even six cows: he grows corn and 'potatoes, and gets in most parts of this district his firing 'for the trouble of cutting, drying, and stacking his 'peats.' Further you go on to say:—'As in the parallel 'case of the agricultural labourer, the crofter has a 'home and small farm to fall back on in the event of 'temporary misfortune. Though he may not get 'the same high rate of wages, he need not fear loss 'of employment through bad times (during the 'long depression in trade in the last decade, wages 'remained as high here as ever); nor can he be 'affected by a strike, nor by many other circum-'stances which touch the welfare of operatives in 'large towns.' Now, that being the condition of the crofters there, there is no doubt that if there was room to extend the system it would be most beneficial. May I ask you whether you do not think it is probable that there would be even more work of that description in the future than there has been hitherto? Will not the introduction of the railway to Fort William first of all, increase the work that will be available to crofters?—Yes, obviously: it has done so already, and will do so in future.

52,203. And there is the prospect of the railway being extended to Mallaig?—I hope so.

52,204. So that if room could be found for the people on the land, there is every reason to place them there, because those that are there are so very happy and prosperous?—Yes.

52,205. I might refer also to the way in which crofters respond to any kindness that is shown to them. In a letter which you quote here from the factor who managed the estate before your time, Mr Bett, he says:—'When I took over the management 'from Mr Belford, there was a large arrear due by 'the crofters,—so far as I can recollect, from £2000 'to £3000, but nearer the latter than the former 'sum. I collected as much of it as I could, but 'that was not much, and as it was felt that while 'this arrear hung about the crofters' necks they 'would make no effort to better themselves, I was 'authorised to draw my pen through the whole sum 'outstanding, and begin on a clean sheet. This very 'generous act had a most beneficial effect, for during 'the remaining ten years of my factorship, there was 'not a farthing of arrears on the estate.' So that crofters, when they meet with any kindness, do respond; and in this case, for ten years, although it is not stated that they got any reduction, they paid the full rents, and that in very bad times?—Yes, that is so.

52,206. There is therefore every reason to believe that when crofters are treated in a generous manner, they will respond. I was rather struck, however, with the nature of the generosity in this case. The factor calls it a very generous act; and he afterwards says:—'I collected as much as I could.'—It was his duty to do so, I suppose.

52,207. Quite so; but the curious point is that he calls it a very generous act to cancel what he could not collect?—Then he was generous with other people's money: it was not his money, but my father's.

52,208. It rather struck me as a curiosity, and your comment upon it is:—'The whole incident 'appears equally creditable to the proprietor, factor, 'and tenants;' and the part of the factor is that as he could not collect more of the arrears——?—No, excuse me; allow me one word. What I meant was that the factor recommended that course to my father; and I say it was very creditable to him to take that view; to give that sound and wise advice to the proprietor.

52,209. But he collected all he could; what more could he do?—As I said before, that was his duty: he was paid to do it.

52,210. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Reference was made, Lochiel, during your long examination, to the Royal Commission over which Lord Napier presided in the year 1883. I think that you yourself, Lochiel, recommended to Parliament that an Act should be passed on certain lines, for the benefit of the Highland crofters?—Did I? I made a recommendation which has been often quoted to-day, but I do not think I mentioned any Act.

52,211. The Commission as a Commission unanimously recommended that Parliament should pass an Act?—Lord Napier and four of the Commissioners recommended a land scheme, which I and one of the other Commissioners did not see our way to support.

52,212. They recommended, among other things, improving leases?—Yes, that was one of Lord Napier's recommendations.

52,213. And they did not recommend a judicial rent?—No.

52,214. And what Parliament gave effect to was not what the Royal Commission recommended, but what the people wanted; the Act which was passed was not framed upon the lines recommended by the Royal Commission?—I said so in my statement.

52,215. Then I think, Lochiel, that the Commission unanimously recommended that no more land should be given over to deer?—Yes.

52,216. Have you yourself, Lochiel, added to your deer forest area since you made that recommendation?—No, I have not added to my deer forest area, with the exception of a very small bit which is hardly worth talking about; it was a bit that I was obliged to add to the forest.

52,217. According to a return issued by Parliament in 1891, you there stated that you added 4500 acres?—I was going to explain what that was. There was a farmer occupying part of a farm which I once occupied myself,—the farm of Fassifern; and he came to me and said: 'I have got a lease of this 'farm, but times are so bad that I shall have to go, 'or I shall very likely become bankrupt. I cannot 'afford to pay this, unless you agree to take off a 'certain hill' which he mentioned, 'and give me a 'very large reduction of rent.' Just at the same time, the shooting tenant said to me:—'I am very 'sorry, but I cannot stay here unless you give me 'that hill.' The hill referred to was a very bad hill for sheep; it had a wrong exposure for sheep in the lambing season, and unless I had done what I was asked to do, I should have lost an excellent shooting tenant, and my farmer, according to his own showing, would have had to go bankrupt. Therefore, I regarded that case as an exceptional one.

52,218. Perhaps you are also aware from the return I have quoted, that proprietors of deer forests, yourself included, have added a total 664,950 acres to the land under deer?—No; I saw the return, but I am not aware that it is so. I think Mr Malcolm intends to deal with these figures; I have not gone into them.

52,219. You will pardon me if I say that we do not accept Mr Malcolm or his figures as an authority on these matters?—Still less then would you accept me; I do not pretend to be an authority on the matter.

52,220. I am aware that Mr Malcolm in another place said that only about 140,000 acres were added; but this return says that 664,000 acres were added between the time that Lord Napier's Commission recommended that Parliament should put a stop to extension of deer forests, in 1883 and 1891. Now, I should like to refer to another matter which has been mentioned two or three times already,—the meeting of Highland landlords which was held about the time when this present Royal Commission was appointed. Is it not the fact, Lochiel,—and it is only right that you should get the full credit of it in the most public manner,—that you endeavoured personally and used your influence to get the Highland proprietors generally to come before this Royal Commission with evidence, with the view of assisting this inquiry?—Yes, that is so, and I found them quite willing to do so.

52,221. You were willing, but is it not the fact that your opinion in regard to that matter was over-ruled by that of the majority?—No, precisely the contrary; they took my opinion and that of The Mackintosh, which was quoted by one of the Commissioners a short time ago.

52,222. Now, I have a question to ask with regard to the making of the Caledonian Canal. Could you fix the date when the works began?—Somewhere about the beginning of the century.

52,223. Was it in the year 1803, as far as you know?—I will take it from you.

52,224. That the works did not begin till the year 1803?—I will take it from you.

52,225. Thank you. Now, have you seen a book written in the year 1806, by Sheriff Brown of Fort-William,—a book of thirty pages?—No.

52,226. Are you aware of the existence of such a book?—No.

52,227. The book is 'Strictures and Remarks on 'the Earl of Selkirk's Observations on the present 'condition of the Highlands of Scotland,' and it is stated in that book that in the year 1801, a Mr George Denoon carried two cargoes of emigrants from Fort-William to Pictou. Are you aware of that fact?—No, I was not aware of it.

52,228. And that the same author says later on that in the year 1802, four ships went from Fort-William, and in the year 1803 two more. Now the book was written in 1806; will you accept the statements made by Sheriff Brown in that book in 1806, as statements of fact?—I don't know, I am sure; I have no doubt that ships did leave with emigrants, but I don't know why I should be called on to accept Sheriff Brown, or any other Sheriff, who may have lived in 1806. It is a long time ago, and he may have been misinformed. But I should be delighted to answer any questions addressed to myself.

52,229. Did you not state to the Crofters Commission that the people of Glen-Dessary and Loch-Arkaigside left their holdings with the view of getting employment on the Canal?—There has been some misunderstanding about these removals from Loch-Arkaigside. There is no doubt that the people were removed,—that is absolutely undisputed; but what I said was that a large proportion of them were moved to Corpach and Banavie at the time of the formation of the Caledonian Canal. That statement I adhere to. I heard it from my father, who heard it from his father; and not only that, but I heard the same from old people who are now dead, but who told me with their own lips that their people came from Loch-Arkaigside. I refer to Angus Macphee who lived in Corpach, and Ewen Cameron who also lived in Corpach, and only died four or five years ago. I have often had talks with these crofters, and they have told me a great deal about their old traditions and habits. There is no doubt, whatever, that these people were removed from Glen-Dessary and Loch-Arkaigside, and although some may have emigrated, others got lands in Corpach and Banavie. Nay, a large portion of my examination was in reference to these very people, and the manner in which they built houses and reclaimed the land. It is a truism.

52,230. The reason why I have referred to the matter is that Sheriff Brown speaks of the clearances and of a large number of ships leaving Fort-William with emigrants for the Colonies, three years before the Caledonian Canal Works were begun, while you yourself state that they were removed in order that they might get employment at the Canal Works?—That makes me rather glad that I did not accept Sheriff Brown's statements unreservedly.

52,231. You know Loch-Arkaigside very well?—Yes.

52,232. Is it not a most suitable place for such holdings?—No, most unsuitable.

52,233. Were the tenants who were there not in very comfortable circumstances?—I should think not,—not compared with my crofters at present.

52,234. Is it a fact within your knowledge that Mary Mackellar, the bardess, stated above her signature in the Celtic Magazine that the whole of these people had a heavy stock of first-class cattle?—I have the greatest possible respect for Mrs Mary Mackellar, but she was not of an age to speak from personal knowledge of these things. She was not as old as myself, I believe.

52,235. Do you know the two Moys?—I know one Moy.

52,236. Are you aware that these Moys were cleared in the year 1790? Are you acquainted with Mr Alexander Mackenzie's history of the Camerons?—Yes.

52,237. Do you know the two tables at the end, one giving the names of the tenants,—in fact, a copy of the rent roll, an estate document?—Yes.

52,238–39. There it is stated that in the Moys there were twelve Macinneses and four Camerons; is that the fact?—I have no doubt of it.

52,240. How many are there to-day?—There is one Mr Macmillan.

52,241. What does he do?—He farms.

52,242. But there were sixteen farmers in the old times. Now, is it not a fact that the rent was raised at the time of the clearances from £57 to £70?—I really cannot tell you that; I have not got the estate books, and the matter was long before my time; it was in my grandfather's time.

52,243. That statement is bound to be correct, is it not, being taken from an estate document?—If it is an estate document I will accept it as correct, but I cannot say from my own knowledge.

52,244. According to that roll there were eight families of the Clan Cameron in Achnasaul; how many families are there to-day? None at all?—None at all.

52,245. And the rent was raised on the clearance from £35 to £100?—That may be.

52,246. At Kinloch-Arkaig how many tenants are there now?—None.

52,247. There were three tenants of the Clan Cameron there, and when they were removed the rent was raised from £13 to £30. How many tenants are in Glen-Dessary to-day?—None.

52,248. There were formerly ten families of Macphees, four of Macmillans, four of the Cameron Clan,—altogether eighteen that were removed, and the rent raised from £90 to £180. Now, that being so, is it not desirable, in your opinion, from the public point of view and in the national interest, that these glens, Glen-Dessary, Loch-Arkaigside, and the various other glens of the Highlands should be peopled with a small tenantry?—Taken from where?

52,249. From any part of the Highlands?—No.

52,250. Would it not be desirable that the land that is now practically waste under deer in these glens——?—That is not under deer.

52,251. Should be made available by Act of Parliament for the people to take up whatever part of the Highlands they may come upon?—No, I do not think so at all.

52,252. In the event of your having a desire to see more tenants in those places, how would you propose to restrict them? How would you select the area from which they should come, if you object to their coming from so wide an area as any part of the Highlands?—I would take the places where it is required; surely that is the obvious way of selecting them. Where you have a congested population, and people in poor circumstances, surely if anything is to be done, that is where you should go.

52,253. Do you know a place called Dochanassie?—No, I do not.

52,254. Am I to understand your position, Lochiel, to be this, that while you are willing that tenants should be taken into these places if declared suitable and available, still you would object to any tenant being taken for one of these holdings on your estate except parties living on the estate; that is, Lochiel, for the men of Lochiel?—I do not make any distinction between my estate and other estates. I think one condition of any recommendations this Commission may make should be that the migration of crofters should be confined either to parishes, or estates, or to both; I don't think it would work to take crofters from outside,—in fact, I don't think you could get crofters to go from one part of the country to a far distant part, to be planted down among strangers.

52,255. One question more, and I am done. You referred in your evidence in chief to-day to experiments having been tried on other estates, and gave your opinion that they had failed,—I refer to the experiment of creating small holdings?—Yes.

52,256. Did you speak there from personal knowledge?—No, from hearsay.

52,257. Would you be surprised to know that when this Commission visited Barra a few months ago, Mr Ranald Macdonald, as representing Lady Gordon Cathcart, admitted that at her ladyship's request he broke down two large farms, Bentangaval and Garrygal, and divided them among I think thirty-eight small tenants? Mr Macdonald stated that the experiment was a failure at first, so long as he had the control, but immediately the crofters went to the Crofters Commission and got their fair rents fixed, now some years ago, he has been perfectly satisfied with the result of the experiment, and looked upon it as a complete success?—I am delighted to hear it; it is the best thing I have heard to-day, and I hope that will conclude your questions.

RODERICK MACLEAN, Fasnakyle (51)—examined.

52,258. The Chairman.—You gave evidence before us at Beauly last year, I am told?—Yes.

52,259. And I am informed you have some complaint to make; tell us what it is?—The Royal Commission promised me that they would protect me if there was any spite shown or if I was put out of employment in consequence of anything I might say. They have shown me nothing but spite since ever I was at the Commission, and I have never got any work from the estate, only I got work from a contractor for a while.

52,260. You complain that you cannot get work on the estate?—I could not get my peats out.

52,261. What prevents you? Do you mean to say that you cannot get peats where you got them before?—There is a wire fence about six feet high erected, and I could not get through it.

52,262. Who put up the wire fence?—Mrs Chisholm of Chisholm.

52,263. Are you in the employment of Mrs Chisholm?—Not now.

52,264. Were you in her employment when we took evidence from you at Beauly?—I was on the ground; I was in the employment of Mr Winans, the shooting tenant.

52,265. Not in Mrs Chisholm's employment?—No.

52,266. And since that date, if I gather your meaning correctly, a wire fence has been run along the ground excluding you from peats?—Yes.

52,267. Who put up that wire fence?—It was through Mrs Chisholm of Chisholm.

52,268. Mr J. B. Grant, factor for Mrs Chisholm.—Perhaps I may be allowed to explain that the wire fence in question is a fence erected for about six miles to protect the agricultural tenants from inroads of deer. Mr Winans employed a large number of watchers, who did the work rather inefficiently, and on Mrs Chisholm taking over the ground from Mr Winans she determined to erect this fence. As a matter of fact, I had charge of the erection of the fence, and I was quite unaware that Maclean had any peats inside the line. When I found out that he had cut peats there, I asked him to take the peats out. I am not aware that he was in the habit of cutting peats there when he was in Mr Winans's service, and, of course, he never was in Mrs Chisholm's service, though, as a matter of fact, he has been earning Mrs Chisholm's money, because he has been working for the contractor who is working for her.

52,269. The Chairman.—Then what you say is that this wire fence was put up to keep out the deer? [Mr Grant].—Certainly, to protect the agricultural tenants' crops from the inroads of deer, of which they complained very much in Mr Winans's time.

52,270. And you did not know that this man cut peats? [Mr Grant].—I did not, and, in fact, he would have been prevented from cutting peats if I had known. He is not a tenant of Mrs Chisholm's, and has no right to cut peats on her ground.

52,271. And is this place where he was cutting peats intended to be accessible only to Mrs Chisholm's tenants? [Mr Grant].—Certainly, I do not know that it is a peat moss,—I have never seen it, but Maclean himself informed me that he had cut peats there, and I asked him to be good enough to take the peats away.

52,272. Failing his getting peats there, where is he to get peats? [Mr Grant].—I don't know; we are not under an obligation to give him peats; he is not our tenant.

52,273. Was he ever in Mrs Chisholm's employment? [Mr Grant].—I am not aware that he was.

52,274. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Did you apply to any of the local gamekeepers on The Chisholm estate since you were before the Royal Commission last year? [Witness].—Yes, I applied to the whole of them. I was in the employment of the late Chisholm.

52,275. How many gamekeepers did you apply to?—First to the keeper at Fasnakyle, who promised to give me employment as a gillie. I went then to Sir John, the shooting tenant there, and he told me that he could not deal with the matter till the factor came up; and I never heard any word since.

52,276. Did any of the gamekeepers except the one you spoke of promise you work?—Yes, there is another in Glen-Cannich, Macgillivray; he promised me work.

52,277. Did you get the work that was promised?—I did not get any work, though I applied to them all.

52,278. You have lived all your life on The Chisholm estate?—Not all my life, but I was born and brought up on The Chisholm estate; my father paid rent to them for thirty-four years.

52,279. And do people from other estates get employment on The Chisholm estate as gillies?—There are twenty-four, I think, on this part of The Chisholm estate from other parts; and only nine belong to our own district.

52,280. What parts do these twenty-four come from?—Some of them from the Isle of Skye and from Lochbroom and Lochalsh.

52,281. Did you ascertain some time ago that you would not get employment on the estate?—Yes: the forester told my wife that I made the devil of myself to go to the Commission; that is the word he used; when I would be clear of Mr Winans' service I would not get a day's work on the estate.

52,282. Who said this to your wife?—The forester. [The Chairman.—Was that statement made in your presence?—No, my lord, it was told to my wife.]

52,283. Are you perfectly satisfied in your own mind that work is denied to you on the estate because you went before the Royal Commission?—Yes, I am quite satisfied: I tried everything I could do, but could get no work.

52,284. Were you afraid when you came before the Royal Commission of coming forward and stating the condition of the estate?—No, I was not afraid. [The Chairman.—You did come, and I see you gave very full evidence.]

52,285. Were you afraid that something would happen to you for coming forward, although you did come forward?—I was told that there was a spite at me.

52,286. Who told you that?—The forester told me; and every one.

52,287. What is his name?—Alexander Macdonald.

52,288. The Chairman.—I see that at the previous

Inverness.

Roderick Maclean.

examination I put this question to you. 'Have you 'any reason whatever to anticipate any harm to your- 'self or to your employment from having come here 'and given evidence?—Well, I believe they would 'not be pleased at me to give evidence. But have 'you any reason to anticipate any harm? I could 'not tell you: it might.' Then I add 'Mr Suther- 'land mentioned yesterday, and I was much obliged 'to him, and I beg to repeat it, that there is an Act 'of Parliament passed very recently which affords 'special protection to a person giving evidence in 'similar circumstances to yours.'

52,289. Mr Macrae.—How many years have you been using the peat banks from which you are excluded by this fence?—Five years.

52,290. Were others cutting peats there?—Yes, before I went there.

52,291. Mr Grant.—Did you come and ask for work when you were out of the employment of Mr Winans?—Yes, I went to Erchless, and you told me that I would get my chance of work like any one else, but that I would not be required as a watcher.

52,292. Did I not say that there would be some work in connection with the river and that you might get into the contractor's service?—No, you did not say anything of that kind.

52,293. But you were in the contractor's service all the summer time?—I was just a little over two months at it.

52,294. And they did not require you at Fasnakyle, when you made application?—No, they did not.

52,295. Mr Sutherland.—May I ask you, Mr Grant, if you are aware of the terms of the Act of 1891 alluded to? [Mr Grant].—Perfectly, Mr Sutherland. I am rather indignant that such a thing should be said: I have not the slightest desire in the world to keep anybody who likes, from giving evidence.

George Malcolm.

52,296. My lord, I wish, with the permission of the Commissioners, to read first a short statement which has reference exclusively to the estates under my own management, and afterwards to submit a much longer statement with reference to the questions which are being dealt with by the Commission generally. I am sorry that the second statement is so very long, and I am afraid I shall have to bespeak the patience of the Commissioners in listening to it. The statement dealing with the estates of Glengarry and Glenquoich is as follows:—

To The Honourable The Royal Commissioners (Highlands and Islands, 1892).

'Gentlemen,—I have the honour of laying before 'you the following particulars regarding the estates of 'Glengarry and Glenquoich, upon which I have been 'factor for the past thirty years.

'These estates extend to very nearly 100,000 acres, 'of which only about 743 are arable, the remainder 'being pastoral, but consisting largely on the higher 'altitudes of exposed rock. Numerous parts of the 'estates, especially at Glenquoich, attain to more than '3000 feet above sea-level.

'These estates, which were for many generations 'part of the possessions of the Macdonells of Glengarry, 'were acquired by purchase by the late Right Honour- 'able Edward Ellice, in whose family they still are. 'Glenquoich was acquired in 1842 and Glengarry in '1861. The population now is 657, and has varied 'little since the estates were acquired by the present 'owners. Nor has there been much change, beyond 'the conversion of a portion of the pastoral area from 'sheep farm to deer forest, in the use or distribution 'of the land.

'The rental of the estates is £7743, contributed by '87 occupiers. There are two deer forests (one of 'which is in the personal occupation of the present 'proprietrix), one grouse moor, one salmon fishing, six- 'teen sheep farms, and sixty-seven crofters, and other Inverness. 'tenants whose rents do not individually exceed £30. George Malcolm. 'Only one farm is rented as high as £500; the next is 'only £280; the next £165; and there are ten between '£30 and £100. The smaller holdings range from 1s. 'to £30 in rent. Labourers' rents vary from 15s. to '£3 per annum, which includes a good slated cottage, 'garden and potato ground. The whole area of the 'estates, except the small deer forest and Home Farm, 'in the personal occupation of the proprietrix, is in 'the hands of tenants, generally upon lease.

'It has been found that this gradation of size and 'rent of holdings is best suited to the circumstances 'of the estates. Every able-bodied person upon the 'estates has employment within his or her reach, and, 'as a matter of fact, is employed at good and unbroken 'wages. Every crofter keeps a horse, in addition to 'four to six cows, and a varying number of sheep; 'and they all possess first-rate stone and lime and 'slated houses and steadings provided by the estate. 'Their crofts are all provided with sub-dividing fences; 'and their outlying pasture is protected by high 'fences. The possession of a horse and cart is a very 'valuable aid to every crofter here, not only in the 'working of his land, but in enabling him to undertake 'employment in connection with the woods and shoot- 'ings of the estates, by which many of them realise 'from £15 to £40 a year.

'The condition of the tenantry, more especially 'the smaller tenants, and of the people generally 'upon these estates, was not so prosperous when the 'estates came into possession of the present owners 'as it is now, and has been for many years. The 'reason of this is found in a fortunate conjunction 'of circumstances. On one side ability and inclination 'of the late proprietors, the Right Honourable E. 'Ellice and his son Edward Ellice, as well as the 'present proprietrix, Mrs Ellice, to carry out extensive 'estate improvements, and on the other such a con- 'dition of the population, as regards numbers and 'distribution, as best fits them to be the instruments 'and beneficiaries of this. During a residence of 'twenty years or thereby of the late proprietors at 'Glenquoich, a large expenditure upon such works 'of improvement as were practicable in that situation 'was steadily carried on. In the benefits of this the 'local population most largely participated.

'Since 1864 the whole expenditure, both at Glen- 'garry and Glenquoich, has passed through my own 'hands.

'At Glengarry, during the earliest part of this 'period, the capital expenditure largely exceeded 'the income of the estates, but it may be stated 'generally that all the revenue of the estates has been 're-expended upon them in one way or another; and 'that this is still being done by Mrs Ellice, the present 'possessor of the estates. Of this expenditure, by 'far the larger part has been received, and is still 'being received, for services rendered, of course, by 'tradesmen and labourers in the Highlands. During 'these thirty years the proprietors have expended 'in this way no less than £274,749; and have contri- 'buted £28,207 to local rates and taxes.

'Since 1873 a still larger expenditure, considering 'the period, has been made by Lord Burton. This 'may be considered the more remarkable, in respect 'that Lord Burton is not the proprietor but only 'the tenant under a long lease of this place. During 'the past twenty years his expenditure has been '£225,272; or £11,263 a year. This includes rents, 'rates, and taxes and household expenses, but after 'deduction of these a very large amount remains, 'which has been received by the resident and local 'population, as wages and for materials for extensive 'works carried on by his lordship. Not less than '130 miles of roads and paths, 50 miles of fences, 'and many new houses and other buildings have been 'constructed, which have afforded well paid employ- 'ment to a large number of work people, chiefly of 'the crofter class. These works, it may be stated, 'are still going on.

'A few words may be added regarding the general 'management of the estates, and the social condition 'of the people upon them. The factor resides upon 'the estates and among the people all the year round. 'The proprietrix, Mrs Ellice, also lives at Inver- 'garry throughout that period of the year which the 'state of her health permits; and, while there, she is 'in constant touch with the people. The estates are 'provided with a branch bank, post, telegraph, 'and money order offices, and there is a daily post. 'There are three regular places of worship and several 'mission stations in the outlying parts. There are 'six schools planted in the various districts of the 'estates. At Invergarry there is a cottage hospital, 'built and maintained by Mrs Ellice, an estate 'savings bank managed by the minister, school- 'master, and factor; and a lending library. During 'the winter lectures, penny-readings, and such like 'are occasionally conducted in the Invergarry school- 'room. These are generally managed and taken 'part in by persons residing in the village. Prizes 'are given once a year by the proprietrix of the 'estates for the best kept cottages, and for garden 'and other native products, of which an annual 'exhibition is held; and it may be stated that these 'competitions have been most successful in fostering 'and extending a taste among the cottagers for the 'embellishment of their houses, and cultivation of 'flowers and vegetables, &c. The contribution of 'the estates to the rate for the support of the poor 'of the parishes in which these estates are situated 'is 60 per cent. more than is required for the mainten- 'ance of the paupers—a few aged people on the 'estates—whose united drawings from the parish 'rate does not exceed £92. The public allowance to 'these is supplemented from Mrs Ellice's private 'funds. Every family and individual upon the estates 'is well known to, and is visited several times a year 'by Mrs Ellice, and every case of illness or trouble is 'personally attended to by her.

'I think it may be fairly stated that the results of 'this close and constant personal superintendence of 'the affairs of these estates is visible in their con- 'dition, and in the prosperity and contentment of the 'inhabitants. In conclusion, I wish to say, in a 'word, that I feel sure that any occurrence, which 'would disturb the equilibrium of larger and smaller 'tenancies, which has so long obtained here, would 'be a fatal mistake for every class and interest con- 'cerned.'

Respectfully submitted by,
(Signed) Geo. Malcolm.

Invergarry,
31*st August* 1894.

52,297. The Chairman.—What do you mean by an 'occurrence which would disturb the equilibrium of 'larger and smaller tenancies?'—Any great enlarge- ment of the smaller tenancies, or on the other hand, any great extension of the larger ones. We think that we have at present the proper gradation of tenancies.

52,298. What is the subsisting gradation?—I have read out the numbers.

52,299. Is this it,—sixteen farms and sixty-seven crofts?—Yes.

52,300. What is the smallest rent paid by a farmer?—I think I stated that we have ten who pay between £30 and £100 of rent.

52,301. And six above £100, I suppose?—Yes. There is one farm rented at £500, another at £280, and a third at £165; but, of course, there are the two deer forests and the grouse moor besides, and the salmon fishing.

52,302. What is the average rent of the 67 crofters' holdings?—I would require to calculate it, because I have not the result here; after taking off the larger rents from the £7743, all the remaining rents go for the smaller occupancies. The crofters' rents are from £10 to £15, and one or two are up to £30.

52,303. Are these holdings of a self-sustaining character, or do the tenants supplement the produce of the crofts by outside labour?—Each of the crofters has a horse and cart, with which he supplements his income largely by carting for the estate and for the shooting tenants.

52,304. Then the crofters live partly by their holdings and partly by labour?—Yes.

52,305. Are the crofters' houses put up by the estate, or by the crofters?—Entirely by the estate.

52,306. And by whom are they kept in repair?—The crofters are supposed to keep them in repair, but, as a matter of fact, the estates does nearly everything.

52,307. Can you tell me the average expenditure per annum by the estate upon the repair and upkeep of crofters' houses and steadings?—No, I have not the particulars at hand.

52,308. But are you able to say that there is a considerable expenditure in that direction every year?—There is not very much expenditure at present, because the houses and steadings are nearly all new, —that is to say, they have been erected within the last fifteen or twenty years.

52,309. Are the houses all slated houses?—Entirely.

52,310. And mostly of two flats?—Yes, they are all houses containing two rooms and a closet below, and two rooms above; some of them are rather larger.

52,311. Has Mrs Ellice had any application, or have you had any application as acting for her, within recent years for additional land?—Not one.

52,312. For arable or grazing?—Nothing of the kind.

52,313. Now, you have on the estate two deer forests; one of these is Glengarry, with 17,730 acres, and the other is Glenquoich, Easter and Wester, with 46,301 acres. I take the figures from a return compiled by the Crown Agent in 1891?—Yes.

52,314. Dealing first of all with Glengarry forest, has any addition been made to that forest within recent years?—A slight addition was made between 1883 and 1891, the dates of the two returns.

52,315. What was the extent of the addition?—About 2500 acres. In 1883 the area was 15,330 acres, and now it is over 17,000 acres. I may mention that in the case of both these returns I furnished the particulars myself.

52,316. How were the 2500 acres occupied previous to the afforestment?—Partly by a sheep farm.

52,317. One farm, or more?—One farm.

52,318. What was the name of it?—The farm of Greenfield; but when that was being done, the whole of the arable land of the farm, and a considerable portion of the low ground surrounding the homestead were excepted, and are now let to a tenant. Not a single scrap of arable land went in that addition to Glengarry Deer Forest.

52,319. But, I suppose, a considerable tract of low ground went to the addition?—Well, taking off the low ground given to the tenant, not much low ground remains; it is nearly all high.

52,320. What was the extent of low ground allocated to this tenant who remained?—I should think from 400 to 500 acres, but I cannot say exactly.

52,321. But, I suppose, the forest was a forest with a sufficiency of high and low ground previous to this afforestment?—There was very little low ground on it.

52,322. Was it in need of this addition?—Yes, it was always considered too small; and I may say the farm was advertised to be let for two years in succession, before it was dealt with in that way. I tried also to let it by dividing it into several small holdings, and advertised it as such.

52,323. Let us have the particulars of that. How many holdings did you propose to turn it into?—About four.

52,324. Of what extent each?—The extent of the whole is about 8000 acres, if I recollect rightly, and we proposed not only to let it in that way but also to provide buildings for the smaller holdings.

52,325. What rent had you in view?—The old rent of the farm was, I think, £430, and, of course, we expected to get something like the same rent for it; but, as a matter of fact, we did not get an offer.

52,326. There would have been four holdings of how much each?—About £100 each.

52,327. Is that the farm of Greenfield you are referring to?—Yes.

52,328. Not the farm of South Laggan?—No; South Laggan is still a sheep farm.

52,329. Did you advertise it in the newspapers?—Yes, for two successive years, in the Inverness papers, and I think in the Edinburgh papers too.

52,330. And do you say you never got a single offer?—I never got a single offer. One or two people came and looked at it, but even they did not offer for it.

52,331. I presume you have not a copy of the advertisement?—No, I never keep any of those things.

52,332. Can you tell us what were the terms of the advertisement?—It was just in the usual form,—that the farm was out of lease, and would be re-let as a sheep farm; and by-and-bye the advertisement was varied in the way I have stated, offering to let it in three or four small holdings.

52,333. Were you prepared to do any necessary fencing?—Oh, yes, we have always to do that. The tenant states what requirements he has, and then it is a matter of negotiation to settle about that.

52,334. That would, of course, have necessitated the erection of buildings on each of these four farms?—Yes; of course the buildings would have been on a smaller scale than those for one unbroken holding.

52,335. Something between a crofter's house on Glengarry and a farmer's house?—Yes, a small sheep farm; they would have been something like the £100 farms I have alluded to in my statement.

52,336. Then, is this your position, that the land after the lapse of two years or so was afforested, because you found you could not do anything else with it?—That was the position precisely. In the meantime, matters were getting worse with regard to sheep farming, and as we were likely to lose considerable money over it, ultimately the farm of Greenfield was divided in the way that has been mentioned: part of it went as an addition to Mrs Ellice's deer forest, and the other part went as an addition to Lord Burton's. It lay between the two.

52,337. And a third part of it was kept as a smaller farm?—Yes, all the arable land was reserved, and all the low ground of consequence; and all the farm buildings and the house.

52,338. What is the rent of that holding?—£30.

52,339. Was that farm advertised?—It was part of what was advertised, and when that partition of the hill ground was made, it was then that the letting of the low ground and the arable land was made. The two operations were carried out at the same time.

52,340. And did this tenant come forward in answer to your advertisement?—Well, he was a local man who lived on the west coast, and he came down and took the place.

52,341. Was any addition made to the rent of Glengarry forest after this afforestment?—Yes, the assessor took the addition into account, and raised the valuation of the forest.

52,342. Do you know to what extent?—I think he raised it by about £150, if I recollect rightly. It is now £822.

52,343. What addition was made to the rent paid by Lord Burton?—I think we got £400 additional from him; he got a much larger share of the 8000 acres.

52,344. What is his rent?—For that part it is, as I say, £400, but for Glenquoich, and all he has from us, he pays £3412.

52,345. That includes forest and house?—It includes all he has from us.

52,346. Which, I suppose, his lordship holds on lease?—He holds on a long lease.

52,347. I see that the Parliamentary Return bears that the forest of Glenquoich was partly extended in 1883, but I suppose that refers to the addition made from this farm?—It is the same increase.

52,348. And these are the only two forests on the estate?—Yes.

52,349. There was additional afforestment at Glenquoich about twenty years ago?—Yes, about eighteen or twenty years ago.

52,350. There was a farm up near Loch-Hourn-head, possessed by a man, Macrostie?—Yes; the farm that Mr Macrostie had was cleared of sheep, and let to Lord Burton.

52,351. And afforested?—Yes.

52,352. What was the extent of that farm?—About 16,000 or 17,000 acres; I think it is about half of the whole Glenquoich estate.

52,353. It had previously been exclusively occupied, as I understand, as a sheep grazing?—Yes, as far as I am aware.

52,354. Do you happen to know,—it is a long time ago,—what rent was paid for that farm by Macrostie?—When he gave it up, he was paying £800 I think, but the original rent was £1000. In fact, it was £1100, and we had to reduce it to that extent before he left.

52,355. That afforestment was made at a time when sheep farming was more profitable than it is now?—Sheep farming had begun to go down even then.

52,356. Possibly, but it was a very much better business than it is now?—Yes.

52,357. And, I suppose, it was made, not so much because farming was going back seriously at that time, as in order to make a more extensive forest?—The tenant, Lord Burton, made an offer to the sheep farmer, or the sheep farmer made an offer to him, to give up the remainder of his lease to him, and that arrangement obtained the sanction of the estate. We did not propose it directly at all.

52,358. The proposal emanated from Lord Burton himself, with the view of extending his forest?—Yes; I believe the sheep farmer himself was the first party to move in the matter.

52,359. And possibly he went out on favourable terms?—Yes.

52,360. Mr Sutherland.—What did you say was the total area of the estate?—Very nearly 100,000 acres.

52,361. Of which 64,000 acres are deer forest?—Yes.

52,362. Leaving 36,000 acres for the remaining holdings?—For upwards of eighty holdings.

52,363. I wish to get some idea of the distribution of population on the estate. How many people are there on the 36,000 acres?—There are 657 people on the estate.

52,364. Of the 36,000 acres so held, what is the largest holding?—One at £500.

52,365. Can you give me the area?—No, I cannot state the acreages of the holdings on the Glengarry estate, without measuring them on the map.

52,366. How then did you ascertain the acreages of the deer forests throughout Scotland?—I have a map of the whole estate; and it is also put down in that book of the possessions of all the owners in Great Britain.

52,367. The Domesday book?—Yes. It is put there as 99,000 odd acres.

52,368. But that was got from the proprietors, I presume?—I don't know where it was got; but independently of that, I think, a large map of the estate in my office shows that it is correct.

52,369. Then I cannot get the acreages of the separate holdings from you?—I can give you an approximation of some of them.

52,370. At any rate, we have here two holdings, one of which, I understand, has not got a tenant except the proprietrix,—one of the forests?—Yes, it is in the hands of Mrs Ellice.

52,371. So that out of an estate of 100,000 acres, there are 64,000 acres in the hands of two persons, and the remainder, 36,000 acres, among the sixty-seven; and if I could get the acreages of the large farms, it would very considerably diminish the latter figure?—Of course it would.

52,372. What area do you think each of the sixty-seven crofters has got?—They are not all crofters; they have from 8 to 10 acres of arable land,—some slightly more and some less, and they have got several thousand acres of hill ground between them.

52,373. Has each of them a hundredth part of what the forest has?—It must be more than that; there are 64,000 acres in the forest.

52,374. But I am talking of the sixty-seven, not taking the large farms into account?—It stands in the proportion of 64 to 36, so that the remaining portion of the estate has fully one-third of the whole area.

52,375. But, how many individuals participate in that division?—There are the number of tenants that I have mentioned in my statement; there are about fifteen crofters; there are a number of cottars who have small patches of land; and there are a great many estate servants who have got land, too.

52,376. But is it too much to say that the average of the remainder, particularly of the sixty-seven whose area you have not been able to mention, is a hundredth part of the area under forest?—I do not quite follow your question.

52,377. There are sixty-seven people whom you have denominated crofters. There are two forests with an area of 64,000 acres. Has each of the sixty-seven got a hundredth part of the area under deer?—Not each of them.

52,378. So that you have got then a proportion of a hundred to one, and that is what you call 'an 'equilibrium of holdings'?—Yes; I state that taking the arrangement of tenants as a whole, there is a proper equilibrium.

52,379. Which, in your opinion, ought to be maintained?—Yes.

52,380. And which, de facto, is maintained?—Yes.

52,381. You mentioned a sum of money as having been spent on improvements. What did the improvements consist of mostly?—A great deal of it was the making of roads and building of houses.

52,382. What kind of roads?—There were a great many private roads made on the estate.

52,383. Leading to where?—Leading to the various farms and leading from one point of the public road to another.

52,384. Are they maintained as private roads?—Some of them are maintained as private roads.

52,385. Have others been transferred to the public body?—Only one.

52,386. So that the great bulk of them are private roads, I presume for private purposes?—No, they are open to every one on the estate.

52,387. But not to the public?—Some of them are not open to the public; as a matter of fact, no one wanting to go along them is ever refused permission, but the public have no right to go on such roads.

52,388. You also mentioned the expenditure on taxes,—the contribution, I think you said, to taxation?—Yes.

52,389. Was that a voluntary contribution?—No, I merely gave it as a piece of information.

52,390. So it was not a contribution,—it was a statutory impost?—Of course it was.

52,391. Which had to be paid?—It had.

52,392. And any person who possessed the land would have had to pay it?—Certainly.

52,393. So it was not a contribution at all?—In using the word 'contribution' I meant only to show the amount that had been paid in taxes.

52,394. Taxes of which the crofters pay their share?—I don't think that included the tenants' part at all, but only the proprietor's part.

52,395. But it is only a contribution in the same sense in which the crofters' rates are a contribution?—Quite so; it is nothing else.

52,396. You also stated the gross amount of Lord Burton's expenditure. Would you kindly detail what was included in that?—I mentioned rents, rates, taxes, and household expenses of all kinds; and the rest consisted entirely of improvements on the property.

52,397. Can you state which of these it was necessary for him to expend?—He had to pay his share of the rates, he had to pay his rent, and, of course, he had to pay his household expenses. All the rest he had no call at all to make.

52,398. And, as a matter of fact, he did not pay anything beyond what he was called on to pay? He paid what he could not help paying; is not that it?—Oh, no; what he did pay without having any call upon him to pay, very far exceeded what he was bound to pay.

52,399. And is it included in the £3412?—You are talking of the rent just now. The total expenditure was £224,000.

52,400. Out of that £224,000, how much did Lord Burton pay that it was not absolutely necessary for him to pay?—The greater part of it.

52,401. But you cannot specify anything?—No.

52,402. But you say the greater part of it he need not necessarily spend?—The greater part he spent voluntarily on improvements.

52,403. And the people to whom the money was paid left the value of the money in work?—Of course, it was a fair exchange, they gave their labour in return for the money.

52,404. What Lord Burton had in view was the improvement of his own property?—Quite so. I only say it was voluntary; he was under no compulsion to do it.

52,405. So that his expenditure was in exactly the same category as the crofters,—it was necessary for him?—It was not at all necessary.

52,406. Was there any compulsion on him to do it?—No, none. I may state that he did it for the sake of finding employment for the people in his own neighbourhood.

52,407. But for the money received, the people gave full value?—Yes, I claim no special merit for that.

52,408. But why was the fact stated?—As a statement of the expenditure on the estate.

52,409. But no estate can be carried on without expenditure?—We know that there are very few where such an expenditure is made.

52,410. You stated that you had a daily post?—Yes.

52,411. Is that due to the estate?—No, of course not.

52,412. I suppose it is a truism, that any person might say that; it is the post office that establishes the daily post, is it not?—I have not said that the estate did so, or that they provided it.

52,413. You put it in the estate account?—I am merely giving you a little sketch of how we are situated in Invergarry.

52,414. I need not ask you, because I presume it is implied in the whole of your statement, that the equilibrium which you wish to see preserved is, in your opinion, the best possible?—I think so; I think it has proved to be so, upon our estate.

52,415. Is your estate practically what was known in olden times as the Glengarry country?—Part of it.

52,416. How much was outside Glengarry?—Knoydart estate also used to be in the Glengarry country.

52,417. Doubtless you have heard about the Glengarry regiment?—Oh, yes; I have read more or less about it.

52,418. Is that an indication to your mind of a large population having been at one time on the Glengarry district?—There is no doubt there was a larger population, up to about the year 1851 or 1852.

52,419. Now, have you ever contemplated a sudden depreciation in the value of deer forests, such as has occurred in the case of sheep farms?—I do not believe that is likely to occur.

52,420. But I have heard equally confident statements with regard to sheep farms,—I have no doubt you also have,—and they have been falsified by events. Is it not equally probable or possible that they may be falsified in the case of deer forests?—It is possible, but I think it is extremely improbable.

52,421. More improbable than the depreciation in the value of sheep farms would have seemed thirty years ago?—Yes.

Inverness.

George Malcolm.

52,422. What are the elements of stability in the case of deer forests that were absent in the case of the sheep farms?—By far the largest proportion of deer forest land is devoted to the only purpose for which it is suited.

52,423. You have furnished us with a case in point, the farm of Greenfield. His lordship asked you with regard to that farm, was the equilibrium not in existence before the breaking up of the farm?—That is one case, apparently, where the equilibrium had to be altered, because we could not do anything else. I stated that we advertised the farm over and over again, and got no offers; what were we to do?

52,424. Have you got those advertisements with you?—No.

52,425. Are they accessible to you, or would you kindly state about what date they appeared in the newspapers?—It must have been in the 80's, I cannot recollect the exact year, but if you will allow me, I will look it up when I have time. I think it will be found in the files of some of the Inverness papers, but I cannot give you the dates at present.

52,426. Was it a new tenant that you got for the part that was let?—Yes.

52,427. How do you account for the fact that you got a tenant for the remaining part which you did not put into the deer forest, and could not find a tenant for the part you put into the forest?—Because he got the choicest part of the farm, and all the arable land.

52,428-29. The old farm, then, probably had not attained a state of equilibrium?—I do not understand the question.

52,430. It had a certain amount of hill pasture before?—Yes.

52,431. And while it was in that state, you could not get a tenant for it?—No.

52,432. But after the hill part was taken away and added to two deer forests, you then readily got a tenant for it?—Yes.

52,433. Then the equilibrium had been restored?—I suppose you may put it that way.

52,434. You know we have been constantly told that if we disturb the present equilibrium by taking away any part from a sheep farm, the remainder cannot be let?—Yes.

52,435. But your experience has evidently not been in that way at all?—I don't think it has been said that you could not get the other part let for deer forest. I don't deny that if you take choice bits out of a sheep farm or deer forest you could let these choice bits.

52,436. But that is a thing you would not recommend to be done?—No, I certainly would not recommend it.

52,437. But you did it yourself?—Because we could not help it.

52,438. Other people might not be able to help it either?—After all, it is an isolated and single case.

52,439. But would not a public necessity be greater than a private one?—I do not know what other people's experience has been, but that was ours.

52,440. Mr Munro.—I think you informed us that you have been factor on the Glengarry estates for the last thirty years?—Yes.

52,441. You are also, I think, agent at Invergarry for one of our most popular institutions, the Caledonian Bank?—Yes, I am.

52,442. You are a member of several Boards, also, I think?—Generally speaking, I am a member of all the local Boards.

52,443. So that your position gives you fair facilities for studying the habits of the people and their condition, and for knowing the persons who would be most likely to make good use of land?—Yes.

52,444. Mrs Ellice, I think you informed us, has a considerable number of crofters upon her estate?—Yes, she has the proportion that I have stated.

52,445. I have heard it said that these crofters were industrious, thrifty, contented, and well-behaved; is that the case?—To a remarkable extent.

52,446. And may I also take it that their presence on the estate gives Mrs Ellice considerable gratification?—It does.

52,447. I am sure you will be disposed to admit that seeing that that is the position of the crofters on the Glengarry estate, a system that produces such a condition of things ought to be extended somewhat?—Yes, if you can get proprietors to do quite as much for them as has been done at Glengarry. I admit that in that case, by taking sheep farms, or deer forests if you like, you could do some good if you could get the proprietors able and willing to do as much at the outset. We have heard a great deal here to-day about the difficulty of finding capital for establishing these holdings. Now, in the case of our crofters, the whole capital, apart from the stock, has been found by the estate.

52,448. Would you mind telling us whether Mrs Ellice has conferred any special privileges or advantages on those crofters, beyond what other landlords have?—I think she has, in the way of providing most excellent dwelling-houses and steadings for them, which in every case have cost upwards of £300. I don't think you will find that usual upon crofting estates.

52,449. So that you attribute their contentment mainly to the fact of what Mrs Ellice has done for them, more than to their own industry?—Oh, no; but that has acted as a stimulus, no doubt, to their industry.

52,450. But you are not prepared to say you would like to see more crofters settled there?—No, I don't think we have room for more.

52,451. Can you tell me off-hand the exact distance we traverse from the moment we leave Invergarry, through the Glengarry and Glenquoich deer forests till we reach Loch-Hourn?—Through the deer forest part alone?

52,452. I understand it is entirely deer forest?—Oh, no; you drive nearly nine miles before you touch deer forest, from Invergarry Inn.

52,453. But how many miles do we traverse through deer forest alone?—About 18 or 20 miles.

52,454. I have gone through that forest lately, and I must say I was struck with the desolate aspect of the place; apart from gillies and others employed on the deer forest, I only met with one inhabitant in the whole of that district. Now, I am sure you are not prepared to defend a state of matters that leads to the desolating of an entire tract of country like that?—You must have been unfortunate that day in not seeing many of the inhabitants, because there are as many inhabitants there now, and even more, than there were before it became a deer forest.

52,455. Your case is that you attribute the depopulation of that district more to sheep farms than to forests?—It took place long before the days of any afforestment there.

52,456. I quite agree with you; I have not the slightest doubt about that.—I may be allowed to add that there is no evidence that in all that district to which you refer there ever was a population living there. There are plenty of documents and evidence to show that nearly the whole population on Glengarry estate lived at the two ends,—at the east end down about Invergarry, and towards the canal, and at the west end about Knoydart estate; and I defy any person to point out any traces of population or residence between these places, even in the days of sheep farming. [Mr Sutherland.—But previous to sheep farming?—Or before it. There are no traces of people having been there at any time.]

52,457. The evidence you refer to, would, I presume, be dismantled houses?—Yes, and green patches, marks of old cultivation; you do not find these there.

52,458. Of course, dismantled houses might be entirely removed, and no evidence of them remain?—Well, there are none there, and the other evidences which you usually find in such cases are wanting also.

52,459. Is it not on record that that territory did support a larger population than it does at present?—

As I say, it did support a larger population, at the two ends, after a fashion.

52,460. While talking of this question, I see that in the interesting paper which you submitted to Lord Napier's Commission you gave statistics to prove that the population of the Highland counties had not decreased?—Yes. I do not remember the particulars at present, but I think I did do so, taking the counties as a whole.

52,461. In submitting that information, were you careful to eliminate from your calculations the increase of the population in towns?—I think what I stated was that taking the northern counties rather than the Highland counties, there was a distinct increase; but that if you took the Highland counties, which we may now take to be the crofting counties, there was a decrease of 7 per cent.

52,462. By the northern counties, I presume, you mean such counties as Aberdeen, Banff, Elgin, Nairn, Inverness, Caithness, Ross, and Sutherland, and so on?—Yes, I believe I took into account all the counties in which there were deer forests, for it was leading up to a question about deer forests, and I took those counties simply because they contained deer forests. But in counties only which are now crofting counties by Act of Parliament, there was a decrease, I admit.

52,463. But I put it to you in this way:—Is that a strictly fair way to submit a statement of the population in these counties? I put the question to you in that way, because you are perfectly sensible of the fact that the allegation has been made that the rural portions of the counties have been denuded of their population in order to make way for sheep farms and deer forests; you are quite aware of that?—Yes.

52,464. You seek to prove that these counties have not decreased in population, but rather the reverse, and you do it by including the towns in your calculations. Now, you are aware that there has been a very considerable increase in many of the towns situated in the counties which you condescend upon, e.g., Aberdeen, Inverness, and many others?—I admit that; and now I recollect that this was brought out in my examination. But I repeat that I also gave a comparison of the crofting counties, and showed that there was a decrease there, contemporary with a decrease of the rural population all over the country. I wanted to bring out that this state of matters was not confined to the Highlands, but had taken place to a greater extent in some of the southern counties.

52,465. But you admit that a considerable decrease has taken place in the rural parts of the counties, I presume?—Oh, yes, I do.

52,466. Of course to go and include the towns would be entirely misleading in a statement of that sort?—No, I stated it in both ways, so that there could be nothing misleading about it. I gave it both ways, and it was brought out in my examination.

52,467. The statement here is simply limited to the counties, and you are not careful to specify the fact that it covers the increase in the towns as well?—I quite admit what you say, subject to the explanation I have made.

52,468. I am glad you admit frankly that there has been a decrease in the rural parts of the counties?—Yes, in common with the rest of the country.

52,469. Now, in that paper which you read before the Commission, you will excuse my referring to one remark which you make at the conclusion of your paper, where you say:—'What is called fixity of 'tenure would be a gross mistake if applied to High-'land crofts. It would infallibly prove to be a direct 'premium on indolence, and the foe of all enterprise 'and push in the great majority of cases.' Since you made that statement, the Crofters Act has been in existence for a period of over eight years. Now, would you be prepared to defend that statement to-day, and say that it still stands?—I think that if I am to be examined upon the larger statement which I am to read, your question will come more naturally then, for in my other statement I deal with that very point. I shall be very happy to answer questions of a general character after reading the paper which is to follow, and in which the point you refer to is dealt with to a certain extent.

52,470. I admit at once that that is a very fair position for you to take up.—I should perhaps add that I had no idea I was to be examined at the present moment; I thought I should read both papers, and then be examined. I am, of course, quite willing to answer any questions, but I would suggest that any questions of a general character should be deferred until I have laid my views fully before the Commission.

52,471. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Perhaps I may be repeating some questions I have asked you already, but I would like to know how much has been added to the deer forests since the date of the Napier Commission?—That also is a question that I should prefer to deal with later on.

52,472. I would rather have it at present.—I will answer it certainly: 634,000 acres or so.

52,473. But what I want to know is the extent of the addition to Glengarry and Glenquoich forests, since the visit of Lord Napier's Commission?—I think I gave that information to Mr Sutherland. Glengarry forest in 1883 extended to 15,230 acres, and it is now 17,730 acres; difference, 2500 acres. Glenquoich forest in 1883 occupied 34,400 acres, and it now extends to 46,301 acres; difference, 11,901 acres. Total increase, 14,401 acres.

52,474. That is the addition made to the forest since Lord Napier's Commission was here?—It must be.

52,475. Now, if you turn up the report of your evidence, p. 2853, you will find that you there state the total acreage as 100,000 acres?—Yes.

52,476. You were asked the question:—'How 'much of that is under deer forest?' and your reply to that is 'less than half'; so that at that time, according to your evidence, the deer forests occupied less than 50,000 acres?—Yes. The exact figure is 49,630 acres.

52,477. And now there are 64,031 acres, and you say the difference is how much?—I say the difference is 14,401 acres.

52,478. I observe that you also said in your evidence that there was not much more suitable land to be added to deer forests; and yet in the case of your own estate you have added upwards of 14,000 acres?—Yes; well, it is a question of opinion whether that land is suitable or not suitable; I only say we could do nothing else with it.

52,479. But surely you must have had in view your own estate when you made that allegation, that there was not much land suitable for being made into deer forests?—Yes, but it all turns on the word 'suitable,' and also on the fact, which please do not forget, that we did everything we could to continue that land under sheep.

52,480. So that in your own case, that prophecy of yours that there would not be much added to the deer forests, did not hold good, for you have added a good deal since then?—The returns speak for themselves; we certainly added the difference between the returns of the two periods.

52,481. And you acknowledge also that throughout the Highlands generally, great additions have been made to the deer forest area since that time, as well as in your own case?—This return brings out a very large addition. But I would wish to state again that that matter is dealt with fully in the paper I have still to submit.

52,482. I mention it here because there has been a great addition in the case of your own estate, of which you ought to have known at the time you made that statement before the Napier Commission. That is why I bring out the fact in this connection; you must at that time have regarded the land as unsuitable for an addition to the deer forest?—Well, you may make that assumption, but you have not asked me any question about it.

52,483. You have answered the thing yourself. The point is this, that you then said there was not much suitable land to add?—Yes, and I have not admitted that this is suitable land to be added to deer forest.

52,484. Why should you add it, if it were not suitable?—I have explained several times already, that we could not use it for any other purpose.

52,485. You now say it is not suitable, do you?—No; that is a question—

52,486. It must be one or other; I ask you that question?—I am going to answer it if I get an opportunity. That was a question for the tenant to consider; if we found a tenant willing to take it, surely that is enough.

52,487. It is not the tenant's opinion, but your own, that I want. Is it your view that it is not suitable?—It is suitable land for a deer forest, but not so suitable as other lands on the estate and on other estates. I admit that; and I state that it never would have been made deer forest if we could have let it in any other form.

52,487A. Why is it not suitable, then?—Because it is not so high as some other forest ground.

52,488. And, therefore, it is of a character that would make it more suitable for sheep, and for cultivation if possible, than for deer forest if you could get a tenant for it?—There is not one single foot of it suitable for cultivation beyond what is already cultivated and let to an industrious tenant, as I have already stated.

52,489. Nothing on it fit for cultivation?—Not one inch, in my opinion.

52,490. Then you acknowledge that the land held as forest in Glenquoich is very suitable for sheep?—It was for many years under a wedder stock of sheep, and, therefore, is to that extent suitable for sheep grazing; but there is a very large extent of ground in Glenquoich that no sheep ever in this world went upon; and as we all know, wedder stocks have ceased to pay; they have been losing money to everyone connected with them for a good many years back, and that is the reason why that ground was afforested.

52,491. Now, with regard to the expenditure on the two estates, I think it amounts to something like half a million?—Yes, including everything.

52,492. And on the Glenquoich estate there is an expenditure of £11,000 a year?—Yes, including rent, rates, and taxes.

52,493. Does that expenditure add very much to the value of these forests? Are they getting more valuable, seeing that £11,000, or, leaving out the rent, something like £9,000 is spent in Glenquoich every year?—If it is not increasing the value of the estates, it is adding immensely to the comfort of the people, who would be very much poorer if it were not spent.

52,494. So far as the value of the land is concerned, it is not added to?—Oh, no; it is rather a question of increasing the comforts of the people.

52,495. But from the aspect of productiveness, that money is altogether wasted?—Well, I admit there is very little commercial value to be had out of deer,—out of the carcases of deer, if that is what you refer to.

52,496. That is the product of the land; but apart from that, there is £9000 being put into it every year, and no return got?—It is not put into the estates, but it is carried away by the people who are working upon the estates.

52,497. But you told us already that these people left the value of the money they got in the estate; therefore, you see while that money is spent on the estate year after year, if the money were wisely spent the value of the place ought to increase?—It is well spent on permanent improvements,—that is apparently what you are meaning,—because a great many new houses have been built for the people, some new roads have been made, and a great number of paths.

52,498. Is the value being increased in the Valuation Roll?—Yes, immensely, as soon as it was made deer forest.

52,499. But since then this great expenditure has been made upon it?—Well, I don't think there has been any change for a number of years back, but the assessment was raised.

52,500. The valuation has not been increased for many years, although £9000 a year has been spent?—No; but, on the other hand, if that had not been done and if the place had been still under sheep, the valuation would have been a great deal lower than it presently is.

52,501. But I look to the waste of money, and the waste of the services of people on that land, without any increase in the valuation?—What would it have been, if I may be allowed to put it that way, if the land had remained a sheep farm?

52,502. I do not want to enter into that question now, but I would like to bring that aspect of it before your mind,—the waste of money; that these permanent improvements, whatever they are, do not add to the value of the estate, and the ratepayers do not get the benefit of it by an increased valuation of these lands?—I do not regard as wasted anything that goes into the pockets of the poor crofters who come up there to work.

52,503. But you do not give it to the people; it is not a present to the people?—They do not get a present of the works, but they get the money expended for the works.

52,504. But they are employed on utterly unproductive works; their labour is wasted?—I don't suppose the crofter minds that.

52,505. But from a national point of view, and from an economical point of view, it is an utter blunder to spend that money?—Very well, let us have it so.

52,506. It is so, without any question. How many crofters are there on the estate, under the Act?—There have been no applications at all under the Crofters Act.

52,507. But can you give us the number who are under the Act, although they should make no application?—There are from fifteen to twenty, I should say.

52,508. I thought you said there were sixty-seven crofters?—Small tenants; they are not all crofters. I did not call them crofters; I said they were occupants under the £30 limit.

52,509. So that of crofters within the meaning of the Act there are about fifteen?—Yes, I should think that is about the number.

52,510. It is not a very important matter, the population of that particular district, but I think you say that the population is rather increasing, is that so?—It may be called stationary.

52,511. It is exactly what it was when the estates were bought?—There may perhaps be a dozen fewer or a dozen more, but there is no greater difference, I think.

52,512. But you cannot give the exact figure?—No.

52,513. Then you say there are two forests and a grouse moor on the estate. Is it a pure grouse moor?—It is the grouse shooting upon a sheep farm.

52,514. And that sheep farm is occupied by a farmer, I suppose?—Yes; it is the £500 farm of which I have spoken.

52,515. What is the value of the grouse moor?—We get a rent of £700, but a large part of that goes for the shooting lodge and amenities, with some fishing rights. You may call it £700.

52,516. So that the grouse rent is equal to the pastoral rent?—It is rather more, at present.

52,517. Then, is it the case that in many forests, if you count the grouse rental and the pastoral rental, these two would in many cases equal what is now in the Valuation Roll as a deer forest?—In very few cases indeed.

52,518. Mr Shaw Stewart.—With regard to the expenditure on the Glengarry estate, has a good deal of that money been spent on the planting and management of fir wood on an extensive scale?—Yes, a good deal of planting has been done on Glengarry.

52,519. You would hardly call that a waste of money?—Certainly not.

52,520. You were asked a short time ago about the depletion of the rural districts in the Highlands, and the increase of the population in towns. Should you say that it is a matter of common knowledge, however much we may regret it, that the Lowlands of Scotland and most parts of England are suffering from the same circumstance?—Yes, and to a greater extent. That is one of the matters which I intend to allude to in my statement; a great deal of this examination is, I think, an anticipation of what I intended to say.

52,521. So that, in that respect, the Highlands of Scotland are not peculiar, or different from the Lowlands of Scotland, or from a great extent of England?—Not at all.

52,522. Mr Sutherland.—You stated that evidences of former occupation were not visible within a certain area on the Glengarry estate?—Yes.

52,523. Is it the case that a good deal of the land that was occupied before, and arable, is now under plantation?—Not that I am aware of, and I have done a large quantity of planting myself, since I went there.

52,524. Then, I think you challenged any person to say that there were any evidences within that area of former habitation?—Yes, I do. Of course you may see one place, or perhaps two—

52,525. Do you deny that I have seen one place?—I don't recollect it.

52,526. Would you deny that I have seen several places?—No; I would probably admit it, if you refresh my memory.

52,527. And that trees were planted upon every part of it that I have seen?—I don't know it; I cannot recollect it, at any rate.

52,528. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—I find in the Minutes of Evidence taken by the Select Committee on Colonisation in July, 1890, you were asked by Mr Campbell Bannerman, the following question:—'May 'I ask have you many crofters upon the properties 'you manage?' and your reply is—'We have only from 'thirty to forty families, I think?'—I suppose that meant crofters and cottars.

52,529. Do you think you were giving a full answer to the question put? You were asked 'How many 'crofters,' and you said 'thirty or forty,'—did you mean crofters?—It may have meant only the crofters; of course, I was speaking off-hand, not having the particulars before me; but you will find in the same book from which you have quoted, that this matter is explained farther on, and corresponds with the statement I have made here.

52,530. Did you at that time believe that there were between thirty and forty crofters on the estate?—I did, or I would not have said so.

52,531. So that you meant crofters when you used the word families in the answer?—I did.

52,532. Now, what properties did you refer to? The question was 'upon the properties that you 'manage'; what properties were these?—They must have been Glengarry and Glenquoich.

52,533. I have taken the last Valuation Roll, and summarised the number of tenants on the Glengarry estate as follows:—Two tenants pay £30; one £19; two £12 odds; one £11 odds; four £10; one £9; one £7; two £6; one £5; and two £4, making altogether eighteen crofters. Now, if in July 1890, there were between thirty and forty crofters on Glengarry, how does it happen that there are only eighteen there to-day?—I have already stated that I was speaking on that occasion off-hand, without having either the Valuation Roll, or a rent-roll, or anything else before me. I have to-day given the correct figures.

52,534. Am I then right in assuming that your statements of fact given on that occasion may be accepted as very loose and very vague statements?—I don't think I need give any answer to that question.

52,535. Did you not in your statement to-day say that there were sixty-seven crofters?—No.

52,536. What was the word you used in connection with the sixty-seven?—I said there were sixty-seven occupancies under the £30 limit.

52,537. Holdings?—Occupancies, or holdings, whatever you like to call them. [The Chairman—The exact words are 'crofters and other tenants whose 'rents do not individually exceed £30.'] Inverness. — George Malcolm.

52,538. So that there are only eighteen crofters within the Act?—Yes. There is a large number of cottars and cottagers, besides the crofters.

52,539. Then, have all these other tenants, to the number of forty-nine, a holding?—Every one of them has a house and garden, and some of them have got potato ground.

52,540. Have they all a garden, every one of them?—Yes, I think every house in the glen has got a plot of garden ground, and a large number of them have potato ground as well.

52,541. How many of the forty-nine have potato ground?—I cannot tell you at this moment.

52,542. Approximately?—Perhaps the half of them.

52,543. How many of the forty-nine have got a cow?—I cannot tell you; I did not bring the particulars of them.

52,544. Are there half a dozen cows among the forty-nine?—I cannot say.

52,545. Are there two cows between the forty-nine?—I think there must be more than that, but as I say, I cannot give you the exact particulars.

52,546. The Chairman.—Then, Mr Malcolm, as we have no other questions to ask upon the matters connected with these estates, kindly proceed with your general statement?—I shall have to bespeak the patience of the Commissioners, for the statement is very lengthy.

Gentlemen.—The objects of your inquiry are First:—To ascertain whether, within the area to which your labours are limited, there is land, and if so, how much land, now occupied for the purposes of a deer forest, grouse moor, or other sporting purpose, or for grazing, not in the occupation of crofters or other small tenants, which may be withdrawn from its present use, and applied to the formation of new or the extension of existing crofts, within the meaning of the Crofter Acts; and Second:—To ascertain whether such land is capable of being cultivated to profit, or otherwise advantageously occupied by crofters; including, no doubt, in the latter proposition the further questions, which are inseparable from it, whether such land may be more profitably occupied by crofters, than by its present possessors, and if so, upon what terms.

I desire respectfully to bring under your notice some considerations, evolved from a long personal experience of these questions, which have convinced me that the objects above defined are not permanently practicable, and that even if they were so, they would, in relation to other and larger interests in the Highlands, be in the highest degree prejudicial to the general welfare of the Highland people.

In pursuance of this intention it will be impossible to avoid a short retrospect of the history of the class in whose interests your inquiry has been instituted, but it will be unnecessary to enter into the subject beyond a few generations backward. It is by nobody supposed that the 'good old times' which are occasionally referred to as having been lost to the Highlands, but are no where related by any responsible historian, are of great antiquity. They cannot have existed during that dark period, when all that is known of the region, forming the seat of this inquiry, amounts to little else than a record of continuous strife, war and bloodshed; of cruelty, theft, oppression, and vice practised by the chiefs and lesser barons, and of grinding misery, want and suffering as the lot of the people. No fervour of even Celtic imagination could possibly conceive these old times as having been in any sense good. In so far as the period of these alleged departed halcyon times in the Highlands can be conjectured, they are supposed not to recede beyond the middle or first quarter of the last century. It will, in any case, serve the present purpose to limit the survey practically to the period since that date. It was then that two very notable and far-reaching political events occurred in the Highlands, in the suppression of the Rebellion of 1745, and the abolition of Heritable Jurisdictions in 1746; it was then that the class now known as crofters were established as independent tenants, holding their lands direct from the landlords, and it was shortly after then that the introduction of improved sheep farming on a systematic and extensive scale took place, undoubtedly, the most remarkable and beneficial economic movement which the Highlands have ever seen. From these facts the convenience and advantage of adopting this starting point will be more apparent.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

But while it is unnecessary for the present purpose to carry inquiry into the misty and turbulent ages of Scottish history, it is well that it should be noted, with reference to a certain aspect of agrarian agitation in the Highlands, existing in the present day, that documentary evidence not only of continuous and undisturbed individual ownership of land, but of individual occupation of land, equally in the Highlands and Lowlands of Scotland, from a very early date, is beyond all question. From the thirteenth century at least charters and other instruments of conveyance of land are in abundant record, and inasmuch as in many of these deeds unmistakable references are made to prior ownerships, it seems scarcely possible to set a limit to the date when individual ownership and free sale as well as administration of land in Scotland was not a familiar operation.

With regard to the early tenancy of lands in Scotland, it is clear from the earliest recorded lease in 1312, two years before the battle of Bannockburn, and from numerous documents of similar import, and not much later date, that the letting of land, for onerous considerations, and upon definite conditions, between individual owners and individual occupiers, was then of common occurrence. There is the best reason for believing that transactions in the letting of land to agricultural use were of common occurrence some centuries earlier, for the specific and wisely liberal conditions, inserted in the Scone lease of 1312, and similar early instruments with reference to the cultivation of the land, payment of rent, and the fulfilment of other obligations, do not greatly differ from, and may be said to be perpetuated in leases of land in the present day. What we still know in practice as an 'improving lease,' with a rent graduated to the progress and value of the improvements, the Scone lease of 1312 clearly was, and it was otherwise framed with surprising skill and adaptation to the agricultural wants of the period.

But while these facts are firmly embedded and preserved in the early historical annals of Scotland, the evidence is no less abundant and clear that down to the beginning of the seventeenth century as regards the greater part of Scotland, and for more than a century later as regards the Highlands, the political condition was almost constantly such as to stifle the progress of agriculture and every other peaceful art. National wars and internecine feuds; military service, involving absence from and neglect of tillage of the land, devastation and pillage, wherever the fortune of war led the battling forces; occurring and recurring almost without intermission down to the Union of the Scottish and English Crowns in 1603, all but smothered the vitality of agriculture, and crushed the growth of every peaceful and useful feature of the social life of these times.

But on the fusion of the crowns, and consequent transference of the Scottish monarch, with many of his powerful nobles, from these immediate scenes of turbulence and lawless exactions, to the English capital, a great improvement was effected. With so large an augmentation of power in the central and supreme Government the lawless but divided forces in the northern kingdom were more readily quelled or crushed. It was natural and inevitable that the force and effect of these corrective measures should first have been felt in the southern districts of Scotland, for while no less turbulent and troublesome had been the warlike and sturdy reivers and moss-troopers of the borders, than the free-booting, stealthy and cruel caterans of the Highlands, the former were at first more accessible to the power of the united crowns. The Lowlanders were therefore fully a century earlier than the inhabitants of the Highland districts brought under subjection to the benevolent forces which were applied to break the arbitrary power of the barons; and though erewhile a fighting, reckless, and thriftless people, from the beginning of the seventeenth century they gradually entered upon a new epoch of peace and security, and betook themselves to those industrial occupations for which they have ever since held a high reputation.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

In the Highlands the course of events was somewhat different, for there the difficulties of applying peaceful measures of legislation were much greater. Difference of race and language, the existence of great mountain barriers, then all but insurmountable, and various other circumstances interposed to render the peaceful conquest of the Highlands a much more arduous labour than it had proved in the Lowlands. Thus it was that for more than a century after the Lowlands had yielded to the influences of civilization, and had entered upon useful and peaceful industries, the Highlands lagged behind,—a distinction which to this day is marked with very important results. Feuds and fights, reiving and raiding, plunder and pillage, and frequent crimes of even deeper dye, continued to stain the moral and political life, and ruin the social condition of the Highland people, till upon the complete collapse of the rising of the Clans in 1745, adequate measures for the subjugation of the disloyal chiefs and their followers were at last successfully applied. The same results, with one exception, presently to be referred to, then followed in the Highlands as had occurred in the border districts a century or more earlier. The enforcement of law and order was at once followed by a feeling of security and protection, and a decided advance in material prosperity. The savageries and cruelties of war and feud gave gradual place to the humanities and comforts of industry and peace.

But while this was so, the consequences of the delay of nearly a century and a half after the Union of the Crowns, in reducing the Highlands to a condition of peace and regard for law and constituted authority have in one respect been momentous. Enduring to the present day, it forms unquestionably the root of those matters which have led to the appointment of this and previous Royal Commissions of Inquiry into the condition of the people of the Highlands and Islands. What is here referred to is the sharp and striking contrast between the numbers and the material prosperity of the rural peasant population as they are found now in these respective districts. There are sufficient grounds for believing that down to the beginning of the seventeenth century little difference existed between the distribution, habits, and worldly condition of the humbler tenants and peasantry of the district south of the Grampians, and those of the north. In the south the population of this class was perhaps more numerous than in the north, but the people were alike in respect of the wasting and hurtful life which they led. If advantage at all lay with the southerners, it arose from the natural superiority of their climate and soil, and not certainly from any industrial or moral superiority down to the date mentioned.

How different is the case now! In the south the suppression of lawless and destructive feuds, and the consequent decay of the military spirit and habit, were rapidly succeeded by a gratifying growth of the peaceful arts and industries, and especially of the larger and improved systems of agriculture. In the south an economic condition was established, which, being opposed by no artificial barriers, led at once on the one hand to the decay of small and unprofitable tenancies and on the other to the rise of larger holdings, which were better suited to the development of sheep farming, that form of agriculture for which both the southern and northern parts of Scotland are best adapted. As a result of this silent economic change, an extensive voluntary withdrawal occurred of the smaller tenantry from rural life to the larger and more lucrative activities of the industrial centres at home, or to the wider fields of foreign emigration. But while this was so as regards an extensive district, both south and north of the border line of England and Scotland, and while this law of demand and supply has been in uninterrupted operation in every other part of Scotland, it has, by no means, been so in those Highland districts which form the subject of your inquiry. Here, though more than a century later, the same strong and beneficent hand of Government was extended to repress the belligerent political relations, and compose the internal strifes of the Clans, winning them successfully to that loyalty to the British Crown from which they have since never swerved. Here were the same inducements, accentuated by the difficulties of an unfertile soil and ungenerous climate, to quit the discouraging pursuit of petite culture for the wider opportunities of the city. But here the population have in their numbers elected to cling to the restricted conditions of existence which these regions can alone afford to their class. Herein lies the secret of a very striking contrast in the circumstances and sentiments of the smaller tenantry of these two provinces of our small country. Here may be found the source of the poverty, the origin of the discontent, the root of the agitation, and the crux of the agrarian problem in the Western Highlands, which in recent years have attracted so much attention, and which from constant accumulations of population in certain localities have become a menace and a scandal.

The extensive change in the management of Highland estates which occurred upon the discovery that millions of acres of mountain land which had hitherto been put to no practical use, could be utilized by the new system of sheep farming, has not escaped some rather unsparing criticism, in which the flow of sentiment has been allowed an easy victory over the logic of facts. But it is unnecessary at this time of day to expend words in refutation of a contention so absurd, and inconsonant with the most obvious results, as that the introduction of sheep farming into the Highlands was not a great public good. Perhaps nothing in the whole economic history of the Scottish nation has produced more prosperity than this great interest; and if, in the establishment and development of an industry of such remarkable public benefit, other and lesser interests have unavoidably receded, or possibly from causes external to the system, have suffered, these trivial effects cannot for a moment be weighed against the enormous good which has accrued to the general population from the change referred to. A little friction is inevitable upon the fresh discovery and application of economic improvements in conducting the world's business.

But we shall be better able to gauge this economic change in the Highlands, and appreciate its substantial benefits, by glancing for a little at the state of agriculture, and the domestic condition of the Highland people, when this important industry of improved and systematic sheep farming appeared in the Highlands and rapidly obtained a general development. For this purpose the most reliable sources of information are contemporary writers, who were eye-witnesses of the matters whereof they wrote. Of these perhaps the most important and detailed is the well-known Old Statistical Account of Scotland, compiled in the last decade of the last century, under the superintendence of Sir John Sinclair, whose enlightened views on agriculture and many other domestic and social concerns of his day, and whose genius as an advanced improver in his time, appear remarkable even to the instructed observer of the present day. The reports to the Board of Agriculture, also drawn up under the supervision of Sir John Sinclair, and the works of other contemporaneous observers, such as Johnston, Burt, Anderson, Walker, Knox, Pennant, &c. as well as those of Cosmo Innes, Skene, Duke of Argyll, and others in our own day, likewise teem with interesting and suggestive references to the social and industrial condition of the Highlands during the period under consideration.

From all these authorities comes unanimous testimony to the wretchedness of the poor agricultural inhabitants of the Highlands in the eighteenth century; to their ignorance of the better methods of agriculture, and the wastefulness and unproductiveness of their forms of culture. Passable roads were scarcely known till a late period in the seventeenth century, and traffic was incredibly small as compared with the business of the present day; while as to rapidity of locomotion the comparison might be, as a writer has put it, between facilities for travelling in the days of the Pharaohs and the speed of a modern express train. As regards implements of cultivation the advance from the cumbrous and ineffective appliances of that era to those of our own is still more striking. Meagre and uncertain as the fruits of cultivation were in those days, the wonder is that some of these agencies were in any degree operative. Before the introduction of potato or turnip culture; before even haymaking was much understood or practised; when the only crops raised were oats, or bere, or barley, repeated continuously for incredibly lengthened periods; when manufactured stimulants of the fertility of the land were completely unknown; when, further, no better advantage was taken of the latent riches of the sea than of the soil; when systematic fishing and the scientific implements and methods of fish capture, to say nothing of fish culture, now in use, were utterly undreamt of; and when communications and markets for the disposal of fish from Highland waters had practically no existence, it is little wonder if we light upon frequent references in the writings of these eye-witnesses and contemporaneous authorities to periods of great depression and poverty among the humbler population of those days. Evidences of this are indeed so constantly met with in the early records of the Highlands as to constrain to the belief that the normal condition of the humbler classes in the Western Highlands and Islands in those days was one of acute poverty, frequently attended by epidemic forms of disease, which invariably dog the footsteps of want. It would be too much to say that even now those districts have been permanently lifted above the occurrence of seasons of destitution and misery. The condition at the present moment of the crofter and cottar population in crowded localities is indeed convincing evidence that such is not the case. For instance in 1892 an excessive and protracted rainfall, followed by frost and snow, all over the Highlands, destroyed the grain crops so as to render them not only unfit for human food but equally unfit for re-sowing,—a state of matters which, being coincident with prices of live stock so low as to be perhaps unexampled in the present century, reduced the crofter class in the western districts to such a condition of penury and suffering as must have excited the sympathy of all observers and perhaps opened their understanding to its reasons and lessons.

But while, as in the case just referred to, the peasant population of these parts is still frequently reduced,—nay is normally subjected,—to an insufficiency of the necessaries of life, there has been no repetition for the last fifty years, or thereby, of those dreadful visitations of positive famine which are recorded as having overtaken them in earlier times. Painful and pathetic descriptions of such experiences are frequently found in the earlier literature of the Highlands, with the details of which it is unnecessary to burden these pages. The concluding seven years of the seventeenth century were years of great dearth over the greater part of Scotland, and the Highlands then suffered very severely. It was stated by Fletcher of Saltoun that in 1698, in addition to those very meanly provided for 'by the Church boxes,' there were in Scotland 200,000 people begging from door to door. The year 1740 was another of scarcity of food, when a great frost, with 'deep and untimely snow,' occurred in spring. The bad and late harvest of 1782 led to another season of severe and alarming famine, when exceptionally strong measures had to be resorted to, not always with success, to save the people from dying from want. At this period many crofts and farms were abandoned, and a strong tide of emigration to America began to flow. In 1807, 1817, 1836–37, and in 1847–48 similar experiences occurred; but what need is there to follow this subject further, with all its sickening and heartrending details of hunger of man and beast,—of the bleeding of lean cattle for human sustenance; of the suspension and abandonment by suffering multitudes of the ordinary pursuits of business, and of actual starvation both of men and cattle.

It was at a time when repeated visitations of this kind had made it plain that the existing system of occupation of the land in the Highlands was incapable of providing for the steady support of the ordinary population; when food, provided from eleemosynary sources, was frequently brought from more fertile districts to maintain the lives of the people, that the larger and greatly improved system of sheep farming was introduced. Extensive changes in the occupation of the land in the Highlands which occurred at and after this epoch are frequently attributed entirely to this cause, but it is only partly true that these arose from the creation of sheep walks. Sweeping statements have been made respecting the operations generally known as 'Highland Clearances,' and were they wholly true these operations would deservedly meet with condemnation. But gross exaggeration of language has been employed to describe what really did take place when these removals were effected. No impartial reader can fail to be impressed with this. The indefiniteness of the numbers and circumstances of the removals, and the looseness and vagueness of the evidence adduced in support of the allegations made frequently rest on nothing more than irresponsible statements of aged and prejudiced persons, whose words were never subjected to judicial investigation. The truth is, these removals were in the main, an unavoidable outcome of inexorable economic law operating upon the depressed and hopeless condition of the smaller agriculturists in the Highlands at that period, rather than the effects of purely arbitrary landlord power. Chronic want and unhappiness, naturally stirring the longings of those who were tied to this state for a happier life, led them to emigrate in such numbers as actually to raise the alarm and opposition of many landlords, as well as the deprecation of the Government of the day. A further important factor in this case was the establishment of the kelp industry by which large numbers of persons in the condition of cottars and crofters were drawn from the glens to the shores of the Western Islands and seaboard. Last of all, and, probably, least of all, came undoubtedly the influence of the larger mode of sheep farming upon the smaller tenantry.

Turning now to those crofters who continued their avocation side by side with the new style of sheep farmer, what was their condition during that long period of remarkable success, which attended the new era of sheep farming in the Highlands? Generally speaking, they followed, or were free to follow, the same lines of business, though, of course, on a much smaller scale, as the larger farmers, but while the larger farmer throve and filled his coffers, the crofter stuck immovably in his immemorial slough of poverty and depression. While the sheep farmer introduced and depended largely for success upon improved breeds of sheep, and gave his utmost attention to other methods of increment of both carcase and fleece, the crofter, in nearly every case, clung, and still clings, to the scraggiest and least improvable varieties of sheep, in utter neglect of well-understood rules and results of stock breeding, and retrograding instead of advancing in this respect. Neither has sufficient attention been paid by the crofters to what may be called the sanitary management of stock; too often these are seen infected by scab and other preventible ailments. Nor in the general case, has the land been any better managed by crofters than the stock upon it. Modern discoveries for stirring the activities, and applications for augmenting the fertility of soils, they have, with few exceptions, despised or ignored. The land has neither been so well tilled nor drained as even moderately successful agriculture requires. Nor have ordinary prudence and foresight in the tending of growing crops, or in husbanding crops been more apparent. Let it be admitted that adverse and discouraging influences of climate operate powerfully against the success of Highland farming, the fact remains that, working side by side, under the same conditions of weather, and free to adopt identical methods of tillage or pasturage, the sheep farmer has prospered, and not seldom blossomed into a man of wealth, while the crofter remains in the grasp of poverty, and struggles for the mere day-to-day necessaries of life, let alone its comforts or luxuries. He not infrequently sinks, indeed, in his later years, into the ranks of pauperism, or into the scarcely less deplorable dependence upon son or son-in-law who follows him in possession of the croft, and in due time succeeds him in the same miseries connected with it.

Inverness — George Malcolm.

If all this is true of that halcyon period—'the good 'old times' of crofter agriculture; if it is true still, as the appointment of this Commission is warrant for assuming, and overwhelming facts disclose, is there not here a strong prima facie case against the taking of measures for intensifying or perpetuating a social condition among a class which has in the past proved so distressful? It has been suggested that there are at present more hopeful conditions for a further test of the crofting system. But what are these conditions? The providential decrees which govern climate have not been altered in the Highlands. Nor is it apparent that this optimist view is largely shared by the class on whose account it has been propounded. From the genesis of the movement now known as the 'Crofter Question' it has been conspicuously conducted and controlled by external agents, who have copiously scattered the seed which erewhile has ripened into a pestilent crop of discontent, mixed on occasions with the rank weeds of lawlessness, to the sorrowful astonishment and regret of thousands of the crofters' warmest friends. The worst belief of these friends fell far short of beholding that utter disregard of law and order, and cowardly resort on several occasions to intimidation, and even attempted bodily injury to man and beast, of which some unworthy individuals among the crofters have been guilty.

So matters stood until in 1883, a Royal Commission of Inquiry into the condition of the Highlands and Islands, composed of a number of very competent Highland gentlemen, with Lord Napier as president, was appointed. After long and patient investigation of their subject, a masterly Report was presented by these Commissioners, which, though loaded with and marred by a vast quantity of unveracious and worthless matter, contains a very large amount of reliable and useful information concerning the past and present condition of the Highland people and their agrarian customs. The presentation of this Report eventuated two years later in the passing of the 'Crofters Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1886,' under the pilotage in its earlier stages at least of Sir George Trevelyan, who was then, as he is now, Secretary for Scotland. Though this Act, which is now the palladium of crofter rights, may be considered the sequel of the Royal Commission of 1883–84, it is not by any means a replica or literal fulfilment of the findings and recommendations of that Commission. It may not have been surprising that Sir George Trevelyan in his speech of 25th February 1886, in introducing the Crofters Bill, should have betrayed considerable inaccuracy and ignorance in his treatment of Highland affairs as they then stood, but it was with some astonishment, which has never been explained, that it was found that while in his Bill some of the most important and vital recommendations of Lord Napier's Commission were deliberately ignored, on the other hand various provisions were introduced which that Commission had either directly or by implication declined to recommend. Sir George in bringing the Bill before the House of Commons certified that it was an embodiment of proposals which 'would settle and ought to settle a burning question.' That it has not done so is now known to everybody. The existence of this honourable Commission is a conclusive proof of it; and there is a strong probability that this failure is mainly due to the omission to give effect in the Crofters Act of 1886 to some of the strongly enforced recommendations of the very strong Commission who reported in 1884. The authors of these recommendations were much more likely to be right than the originators of that irresponsible advice which has so conspicuously failed in that utility and finality which Sir George Trevelyan so much desiderated in 1886, and is again unfortunately in search of.

Under the Crofters Act, 1886, what may be called 'forcible tenancy' was for the first time imposed upon Scottish landlords, or rather upon that section of them —the sinners above all others—who were within the scheduled area of the Act. It secured to the smaller tenantry of that area (under certain statutory and onerous conditions) fixity of tenure and fair rents, free sale was withheld, but a partial substitute for it was conceded in the provisions for compensation for improvements effected by the tenant on his removal from the tenancy, and in the clause regulating succession to crofts. The working Commission or Land Court which the Crofters Act called into existence was endowed with practically autocratic powers for the fixing of fair rent, and for dealing with arrears of rent. The power to remit or suspend payment of arrears of rent was unfortunately, and perhaps unavoidably, open to abuse, inasmuch as it opened a door to unscrupulous persons to evade their just engagements, though quite able to fulfil them. Not a few persons it is feared bowed the knee to this golden idol.

A very extensive business has been conducted by the Crofters Commission or Highland Land Court. From 1886 down to the end of 1893, the applications before it for the fixing of fair rent have amounted to 18,269, and of these 17,790 have already been disposed of, and the Commission seems to be now within measurable distance of finishing its original labours. It is proper to note that while the applications for fair rent have been so numerous, only 564 applications for enlargement of holdings have been made, a proportion which is not suggestive of a general or extensive desire for more land on the part of crofters. This will be more fully referred to at a later stage of this statement.

Having thus rapidly sketched the origin and effects in the past of the crofting system, and commented upon the existing condition of the crofter class under the influence of the special legislation which has recently been applied to it, I proceed now to consider the question from the point of view which has led to the appointment of this Commission. The raison d'etre of the Commission is a certain agitation or movement of public opinion in which two elements have been conspicuous. First, the existence in certain districts in the Highlands, almost wholly insular or seaboard, of a very inconvenient overcrowding and overlapping of the population, producing serious social and economic evils; and Second, the opinion that this condition and these evils may and ought to be relieved and corrected by a resort to migration of a proportion of these congested communities to other districts within the counties to which this inquiry is restricted. The agitation I have referred to generally embraces a Third proposition, viz. :—that this migration ought to be effected, and for a time, maintained by public agency; but there appears to have been no instruction to your Commission to deal with this side of the problem. I do not pause to inquire how far the agitation concerning these questions has really permeated and moved the whole body of crofters in these counties, or even that limited section of them who can alone be accounted congested, and whose condition calls, it is alleged, for alleviation in the manner suggested. I believe it has not done so, but that it is to a large extent the production and the nursling of a small but prominent and most persistent body of men, who have thrown themselves into this question with very diverse motives; some with benevolent and patriotic intentions, some from no deeper or more useful promptings than the merely sentimental or picturesque in Highland social life; but the larger number from the cravings of notoriety, or the more unworthy calls of self-interest, personal or political.

While agreeing with the statement that in certain insular and seaboard localities in the Highlands there is at present inconvenient and probably insanitary overcrowding of crofters and cottars which must be relieved, I do not hold with the other propositions that relief can best be effected by transferring portions of these communities to other districts within the crofter area, there to pursue and perpetuate their present mode of life; and that this transference should be accomplished and supported in some degree by public money or credit.

If I have in the preceding part of this statement accurately depicted the past condition of the Highland crofter and his predecessors in the same class of life, and fairly explained his present situation and prospects under the environment of the special 'beneficial' legislation which he has recently enjoyed, it must be inferred that the crofter system is at fault. If it has done so little in the past to provide for its followers even a humble share of the comforts and decencies, let alone the brightness and rewards, of life, it must be weighted with inherent elements of failure, incapable of permanent elimination, and certain, under existing or extended dimensions of the system, to eventuate in the same experiences in the future as have flowed from it in the past. But as primâ facie argument will not here suffice, more explicit consideration of the subject will be given under the following heads, viz. :—

First. — Are the propositions referred to this Commission feasible? And Second.—If feasible are they desirable?

I believe them not to be feasible as a permanent settlement of the crofter question, and their infeasibility presents itself to me under several aspects, viz. :—

Insufficiency of land; unsuitabitity of climate; and overpowering expense.

Upon the simple arithmetical question of the extent of land existing within the territory to which this Commission applies, suitable for the crofting industry, and governed as regards situation, quality, present utility, and other considerations, by the terms of reference to the Commission, I do not propose here to enter in much detail. While it is a main point for elucidation by the Commission, it is of subordinate importance to the further question whether such land, whatever its extent may be, can now, or may hereafter, be put into the occupation of crofters under conditions whereby they may realise a profit, or in other words, derive a living, according to a reasonable standard, from the same. But having, for a purpose not very dissimilar to the present, been led to make some investigations into this matter a few years ago, I may here be allowed to state very briefly the results of that inquiry. My inquiry, made in 1885, related, inter alia, to the extent of arable land at that time or formerly within the then existing deer forests. Queries were submitted to the owners and lessees of the whole of the 109 deer forests, which then existed. From a small minority, no replies or information reached me, but taking those from whom I received answers to my queries (which I think included all the larger and more important deer forest) as an index of the rest, I found that the proportion of arable land to hill pasture land in the deer forests stood in the ratio of 1½ to 1000. The total area of the deer forests, as had just been ascertained by Lord Napier's Commission, was then 1,955,209 acres, which gave 2933 acres, or as my returns made it 3184 acres, as the extent of arable land within the whole of the deer forests. Throughout this inquiry, I have noted the evidence upon this point, so far as it has yet been disclosed, and have observed that it has been confirmatory of the conclusions arrived at by myself, eight or nine years ago.

Inverness.

George Malcolm.

It is proper here to state that even this limited quantity of arable ground in deer forests would not be all available for redistribution among crofters. Much of it, nearly the whole of it, probably,—though within the confines of the deer forests, is in no respect made use of for the support of deer. It is fenced from the pasture land to the exclusion of deer, and is either let for rent to small tenants, or held by servants, as part of their wages. You could not, therefore, bestow this land upon crofters from other localities without inflicting obvious hardship and injustice upon the present occupants of it. It would be a clear case of 'robbing Peter to pay Paul.' In not one of the deer forests under my personal management, is there a single acre of arable land assigned to the keep of deer. Every bit of arable, in some cases conjoined with a goodly slice of hill grazing land, is either separately let to tenants of the smaller class, or held and cultivated by the servants required in these districts; and not only are these plots of cultivated ground effectually fenced against incursions of deer, but the whole of the low-lying pasture lands, adjacent to these deer forests, which are occupied by crofters, are similarly protected.

The foregoing remarks with regard to the extent of arable land in the deer forests, may, I think, be considered as applicable generally to sheep farms also, with the qualifying observation that the ratio of arable to pasture land may be higher in the latter case. It has not hitherto, as far as I am aware, been accurately ascertained.

Throughout the discussions and the taking of evidence at inquiries, preceding the present inquiry, relating to the crofter extension movement, it has been uniformly and consistently insisted upon by crofters and agitators alike, that, in the formation of an ideal croft, whether by way of extension or new creation, there must be a combination of arable and pasture land. Opinions have never, I believe, varied about this, although they are rather divergent as to the necessary or desirable proportions of each description of land. Many widely differing views of the best size of crofters' holdings, and by consequence, of its rent or annual value, were propounded to the Royal Commission of 1883–84, and are recorded in their Report. For example; the idea of extent of one crofter of the most suitable size of holding was represented by a rent of £8; another said he should require a croft of £16 annual value; while many were of opinion that crofts or small farms ranging from £30 to £40 in rent would be necessary to fulfil the desire which was expressed by a Hebridean crofter who said 'The very thing we want is to live as farmers 'on a farm where we could make a living out of our 'crofts by our own labour.' (Napier Report, p. 100.)

Similarly variable opinions were expressed in 1883–84 and are still held, as to the numbers and descriptions of live stock necessary for the satisfying croft. In Skye it was found by the Royal Commissioners of 1883 that the minimum requirement would be 4 or 5 cows and 50 to 100 sheep; in Uist 6 cows, 2 horses, and 40 to 50 sheep; and in Lewis 6 to 10 cattle and 40 to 50 sheep. (Napier Report, p. 100.)

The parallel evidence received by the Royal Commissioners of 1883 as to the extent of arable land required for the best size of croft ran thus:—In Skye 'enough cultivated land to support a family;' in Uist 'enough arable land as would supply a family with 'food'; and in Lewis 'from 6 to 10 acres.' (Napier Report, p. 100.)

Inverness.

George Malcolm.

The extent of hill land (which it is necessary to bear in mind would have to be at a moderate elevation) which these estimates imply, allowing 3 acres for each sheep, and an equivalent extent for cattle, would be from 270 to 300 acres for each croft. (Napier Report, p. 101.)

Practical testimony received by the Commissioners of 1883 from other sources than the crofters, and opinions elsewhere officially recorded, confirm or do not materially differ from the figures above stated. These will be further referred to when the financial side of your inquiry or the profitable occupation of new or extended crofts is here considered. (Colonisation Committee Report, p. 295, Question 4769, Question 4799.)

The conclusion arrived at by the Royal Commission of 1883–84 was that 9 to 10 acres of arable land and 277 acres of pastoral land were indispensable for the making of a croft capable of supporting a crofter family in any approach to comfort and decency. (Napier Commission Report, p. 101.) If that view was correct,—and I think it erred in assigning an insufficiency of land,—it follows in the light of the inquiry made by me in 1885, and so far confirmed by the present official inquiry, that the total arable area of all the deer forests would not suffice for the provisions of 400 crofts. How much arable land the sheep farms within the crofter counties contain has never as far as I know been brought to light. The ratio, I am ready to admit, will probably be larger than in the case of deer forests, and the area under sheep farms in the counties now under consideration is greater than the area under deer forests. The following view of the extent of land under deer forests and sheep farms in these counties, though a mere estimate as regards the cultivated land on sheep farms, may not be very wide of the mark:—

	Total Acreage.	Pasture.	Arable.
Under deer forests, .	2,552,383	2,548,555	3,828
Under sheep farms, .	3,119,959	3,112,303	7,656

Thus we have, if there be any approach to accuracy in this estimate, a total arable acreage of 11,484 acres. Assuming all this land to be existent, there remains the question;—can it all be made available for crofter cultivation? By availability I do not here mean, or merely mean, suitability for profitable or advantageous occupation, but rather its applicability for division or distribution in a physical sense. Only a very small proportion of it would be available for new crofts unless indeed most of it were diverted from its present use, by sheep farmers, existing crofters and servants, which would be manifestly absurd and unjust. Further, every one knows that the arable land on sheep farms and deer forests is not all situated at one place. It exists, often in small isolated patches, in different localities. If such arable lands are therefore to be utilized for crofts, the crofters will have to be widely distributed, one or two here and there. Rarely could they be set down in townships or groups. Thus would originate serious difficulties. It would, in the first place, lead to difficulty in regard to common pastures. Pasture could not easily be used in common unless there was contiguity of residence, and where there was not pasturage in common there would have to be separate enclosures, greatly enhancing the expense of fencing. Separation or isolation of crofts in single holdings, or holdings in groups of two or three would also land us in difficulties in reference to roads, schools, and other accessories of village communities. The plantation of communities of crofters in localities never before populated, or which have been long devoid of population, would obviously call for the attentions of the road-maker, the schoolmaster, the doctor, and probably the minister. In districts where a considerable population was thus congregated, those calls on the common public purse, though grevious and unjust to the general body of rate-payers, might not be seriously withstood, but they would be indefensible, and indeed impossible, in cases where only one, two, or three families were concerned. Such cases would perforce be left to 'fend' for themselves in matters of access, education, health, and religious ordinances.

Of all the influences which have led to the troubles and privations of the smaller tenantry in the Western Highlands, possibly the most malignant is the unconquerably inclement climate. No other considerable part of the British Isles,—perhaps no British Colony,—few parts of the world, are subjected to a rainfall so copious, or so frequently visited by violent onsets of wind, as the Western Highlands. The average rainfall is between 80 and 90 inches, and in many districts it exceeds 100 inches; and when there is added to this the destruction often caused by gales of such violence and duration that no corn crops, whether standing or cut, can withstand them, it is no wonder that the cultivation of cereal crops is, for any useful purpose, almost an impossibility in these parts. In many places in the North-West Highlands there are few days of the year on which rain does not occur, and a rainfall of 1, 2, or even 3 inches in a single day is at some of the more humid stations not uncommon. The experiences of the year 1892 have afforded a notable example of the hopeless difficulty of arable farming in this respect. From June till the end of October rain fell with such continuity and copiousness that all efforts timeously to conduct the usual agricultural operations were baffled, and the harvest of 1892 was one of the latest and most disastrous on record. In many places in the North-West Highlands so late was it before the corn was ingathered, and so damaged was its condition, that it was literally unfit for the use of man, and of hardly any value even for stock. An illustration of this in my own district (where no less than 111 inches of rain fell in 1892) may be alluded to because it happened to have been noticed by a writer who appears to have visited a number of deer forests in that year. This gentlemen was so captivated by the smiling appearance in July of a patch of oats, and so moved to grief at its being included in the adjacent deer forest (which it was not) instead of being let to an industrious agricultural tenant (which it was) that he incontinently poured out in pamphlet from the phials of his minatory eloquence against the lairds and lessees of deer forests in general who could sanction such iniquity. But what was the subsequent history of that particular field of oats? In the interval between the apostrophe of this glowing but inaccurate scribe, and the reaping of the corn in question, upwards of 30 inches of rain and snow had fallen and had so soaked and battered the grain as to render it practically useless. Similar deplorable instances of ruined crops throughout the North-West Highlands in 1892 might be mentioned almost without limit. Nor was this disastrous harvest confined to these parts. It may be said to have been general throughout the North of Scotland. No traveller by the Highland Railway for example, could pass through Strathspey without having his sympathies aroused for its hapless tenants. Perhaps there is no healthier or more enchanting region than Strathspey, during the warm and dry summer months, but how terribly rigorous it may be during the rest of the year was greviously illustrated in 1892. The corn crops on the higher parts, having been early damaged by frost, and subsequently overtaken by snow, were literally levelled to the ground, and destroyed for all useful purposes,—many fields not having been reaped at all.*

* The above remarks respecting the harvest of 1892 were written in 1893.

These observations on the severity of the climate and the hopeless difficulty it interposes against profitable cultivation of the soil in these parts, will be illustrated by reference to the map showing the rainfall of the British Isles issued by the Scottish Meteorological Society (which I submit) and are confirmed and emphasised by the following extracts from the same source of the mean annual rainfall at some of the principal recording stations in the West and North Highlands:—

In an interesting article by Dr Buchan of Edinburgh, Secretary of the Scottish Meteorological Society, on 'The climate of the British Isles,' from which these figures are quoted, that eminent Meteorologist remarks, 'The West Highlands present the most extensive 'region of heaviest rainfall in the British Islands. 'The mountain masses, along whose slopes the rain-'fall is precipitated, offer a practically unbroken face 'of high lands directly in the course of the rain, 'bringing winds of the Atlantic. Further, these 'mountain masses present innumerable lochs and 'valleys, directly in the course of these winds, up 'which therefore the winds are borne, and being 'cooled as they ascend, pour down those deluges of 'rain which deeply trench the sides of the mountains 'in the lines of their water courses.'

When even at the level of the sea cultivation of land in the North-Western Highlands is attended with such difficulty and unfruitfulness, it may be understood even by those who are not personally familiar with the climate of that region; that cultivation at altitudes over a few hundred feet above sea-level, must be beset with insuperable difficulty. Yet persons are to be found ignorant or rash enough to advocate experiments in cultivation in the West Highlands up to 500, 700, or even 1000 feet of altitude. In places having the driest and best climate of which the British Islands can boast, cereal cultivation at these altitudes is always attended with risk of failure; in the climate of the West Highlands it would be the greatest folly. While crofters do, as a rule, struggle on in their efforts at cultivation, with what poor results every visitor to these parts is familiar, it is seen on the other hand that the larger farmers in the same districts being better instructed, and perhaps enjoying a larger discretion, and choice of agricultural systems, are generally throwing their arable lands out of cultivation and into permanent grass. Having had practical experience of the thriftlessness and loss attending rotating cultivation of land in these regions, they are wisely yielding themselves to the dictates of the permanent factor,—natural law,—by which this matter is in the end controlled.

In considering whether a systematic and wholesale furnishing out of new crofts from deer forests and sheep farms within the scheduled counties is feasible, a further and very important aspect of the case is, what would it cost? No reflecting person will dispute that this side of the matter is as certainly dominated by economic law as are the points that have been previously here discussed, viz.:—the available quantity, and the limits of cultivation, of land suitable for this purpose. All are equally and unalterably regulated by physical or economic law, and it needs no special wisdom to foretell that an enterprise of this kind, which is unable to pay its way, must end in no great length of time, in disastrous collapse.

In discussing this phase of the crofter question some important and necessary considerations have sometimes been left out of calculation. With some this is due to imperfect knowledge; with others it arises it is to be feared from a less innocent cause. The cost of migrating crofters is sometimes regarded from the point of view of the crofters only; but clearly there are other interests which ought to have consideration, viz. :—those of the landlords, and those of the ratepayers generally. At the very outset the compensation provided under Clauses 8, 9, and 10 of the Crofters Act, 1886, on the renunciation of holdings would face the landlords, falling upon them, or on the adjoining tenants with whose holdings the vacated old crofts might be consolidated, in sudden and wholesale fashion, it would probably be impossible to meet these claims, and a strong temptation would arise to seek relief in the immigration of new and independent tenants to reoccupy the vacated crofts, which would surely be a misfortune.

But assuming this initial difficulty to have been overcome, let us next see what would be the expense of establishing a migrated crofter, under conditions which would afford him and his family a reasonable prospect of living in comfort. No one, it may be assumed, would count it any improvement on the existing state of things to remove families to crofts of inadequate size and insufficient equipment, in localities where they would be complete strangers. Their second state, in such a case, would be much worse than their first, inasmuch as many of them would have to forego the more or less substantial help they had derived from fishing, and from seaware, in their former locations. 'By far the greater number of the 'crofters and cottars of the Highlands and Islands 'of Scotland are wholly or largely dependent for their 'subsistence on their earnings as fishermen,' said the Royal Commissioners who reported in 1884. (Report, p. 53.) There would be, to begin with, the cost of transport, but as this would be an indefinite and varying, and probably not individually heavy item, it may be here left out of account.

It is certain that in numerous cases,—indeed in every case after the limited extent of arable land had been apportioned,—there must be a heavy charge for reclamation. If that were undertaken by any one other than the crofter himself, and were done thoroughly, it would be putting it very moderately at £20 per acre, or for a croft of 10 acres of reclaimed land, say £200. Some notable reclamations of land in the North and West Highlands have very largely exceeded this estimate, and have not been successful after all, but such cases lie manifestly out of account in considering our problem.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

But, say some of the leading advocates of migration of crofters, the land would be reclaimed by the crofters themselves, and they would also build their own houses. What sort of house is here meant may be inferred from a statement of one of these gentlemen to the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Colonisation in 1890, viz. :—'I think 'if you would give say £30, it would be extravagant 'to go to anything further than that for a house for crofts such as these.' (Evidence of Mr Alexander Mackenzie—Colonisation Report, Question 5114). Can it be possibly supposed that in these days a dwelling-house for a whole family, affording means of observing the decencies of life, and providing reasonable accommodation, can be erected for such a sum, even with the crofter's own labour thrown in? The time has, it is believed, gone by when any attempt to reproduce and perpetuate the old, insanitary, comfortless, and it may be said, indecent type of crofter's cottage, would be tolerated. The new style of crofter's house must not be repugnant to the public sense of decency, or offend the requirements of the Acts of Parliament applicable to public health, whatever may be the cost of it.

As with the buildings which the crofter would erect if left to his own unassisted efforts, so it would be with the reclamation of his land. By his own unaided means it would too surely be done superficially and unproductively, and herein to some extent lies the reason why crofter lands yield, as a rule, so much less than farmers' lands. Many crofters are indeed incapacitated from age and otherwise from undertaking the heavy manual labour which these works would necessitate. By some means or other, therefore, a very large sum must be found for trenching, clearing, and draining new land for all those crofters who cannot be provided with it from the existing stock of cultivated land; but, as in the present state of our knowledge, the quantity of new arable land which would be required, and the consequent expense of creating it, is unknown, I shall leave this estimate unsettled for the present, and proceed to show what in my view would be the individual cost of planting and equipping crofts of adequate size from old land capable of immediate occupation.

The expression 'croft of adequate size' may be variously interpreted. I think that no croft up to the maximum limit of rent,—£30,—is in the North or West Highlands capable, without supplementary help from extraneous sources, of sustaining a family in comfort and sufficiency of living, to say nothing of affording, by dint of thrift and saving, a chance to any members of the family of rising higher in the social scale. No holding, in my opinion, of less extent than may be reasonably obtained for a rent of £50 or £60 can possibly do that; but as we are in this inquiry dealing with crofts as legally defined (Crofters Act, 1886, Section 34), I shall adopt the maximum rented croft as the subject of the following estimate of capital required, and constructive account of profit and loss, for such a croft.

The capital account would stand thus:—

New dwelling-house of 4 rooms (2 on ground floor and 2 above), stone and lime and slated, . . .	£180	0	0
Barn, byre, and other offices, do., do., .	80	0	0
Fencing, say 800 yards at 1s. . . .	40	0	0

Stock :—
1 horse and 6 cows, .	.	£92	0	0

For the first year there would not only be extra expense in setting the croft agoing, but there certainly would be some loss in acclimatising the sheep stock to the ground, and all things considered, probably less than an average return. In future years, subject, of course, to market variations, the following would be the Revenue Account :—

Receipts.

Sales :—
1 cow, ...	£7	0	0
20 slack ewes at 12s., . .	12	0	0
30 wedder lambs at 8s., . .	12	0	0
5 shot ewe lambs at 12s., . .	3	0	0
	£51	0	0
	£60	0	0

Interest on Capital at 4 per cent.,	23	12	0
Dipping, ...	1	5	0

The prices here set down for sales of stock are considerably in excess of prices current in 1892, but it is thought well to allow some margin for a return to better prices. In this balance-sheet nothing is credited for produce of the cultivated land, for the simple and sufficient reason that all this, and probably more, will be consumed in the support of the family, and of the live stock during the winter and spring. 'At no time,' says the Royal Commissioners Report of 1884, 'that we know of, was the 'cereal production of the Highlands, as a whole, 'equivalent to the consumption of the inhabitants.' (Napier Commission Report, p. 6). I have not been without doubt whether the wool raised on the croft should not be similarly treated ; some of it certainly would be used at home ; but in any case the value of the cereal produce may be safely set against the value of the labour of the family on the croft, neither being entered in this account.

The calculation of interest on capital in the foregoing account is made on the assumption of the investment or loan being permanent and well secured. If, however, it were to be gradually liquidated by annual payments, covering principal and interest over the usual period of years, the burden thus laid upon the crofter would before many years too probably land him in bankruptcy.

The example just given may be taken as of special application to the western side of the crofter area, and before leaving this division of our subject it may be well to state a case, also, which would more particularly apply to the eastern and more favoured side of that area. Here it would be necessary to resort to a partition of existing farms ; and the divided holdings might pass above the crofting rent limit of £30. For this purpose I shall take a case, present to my mind, as to which some communings about its sub-division have already been held. It will illustrate the supreme difficulty of providing equipment for a number of separate holdings out of one. The farm in question contains 160 acres arable and 362 acres pasture. The present rent is £130. The existing buildings upon it cost £1850. Suppose this farm to be now divided into four holdings, each containing 40 acres arable and 90 acres pasture, it is evident that the present buildings would serve only one of the four tenants, and that entirely new buildings and other equipments would be required for the other three. What would these cost? A dwelling-house, containing on ground floor a room, closet, and kitchen, with lean-to for milk-house behind, and two attic bedrooms, built of stone and lime, and slated and plastered, could not, exclusive of carriages, be provided for less than £220

And a steading suitable to the holding, containing barn, byre, turnip-house, and cart-shed, built of stone and lime, and slated, could not be erected for less than 300

Further for necessary fences, sheep-fold, &c., . 60

Capital required for buildings, &c., for each holding, ... £580

Each tenant's share of the original rent would be 33

To which add interest on above capital at 4 per cent., say 23

Amount of new rent of each holding . . £56

Where are tenants to be found to enter upon small holdings upon these terms ; and if not by this method and upon such terms, how otherwise are such holdings to be created? It would be idle to expect proprietors to do so, even under compulsion, if that be conceivable, for speedy bankruptcy would be the fate of nearly every one of them. Be it observed that as yet we have got no further than providing the land, and the buildings for its use ; but farming land and buildings must have stock, which, in the case we are dealing with, would necessitate a further sum of at least £300, expended upon a horse £25 ; eight cows, £96 ; five young beasts, £40 ; fifty sheep, £100 ; and implements, £39. Here would be created a further capital charge of £12, making in all an annual payment of £68 for rent and interest, if everybody is to have his own out of this transaction. Nor has allusion been made to the fact, that in all cases of this kind the larger part of the original buildings upon the farms broken up, could not be utilised for the new holdings. They would serve one of the smaller holdings only, and what was not thus required would be abandoned.

Estimates of the expense of establishing and equipping small holdings upon much lower terms have, I am aware, been submitted to you, but as one who has been long and frequently engaged in the erection of such buildings, I am obliged to say, advisedly, that having regard to the comfort of the tenant, and the efficient management of the holding, the figures I have given cannot be judiciously reduced.

With regard to the security available for advances to crofters for the provision of buildings and stocks, it is evident that it would be of a very precarious character. Any security at all, taken over sheep or other live or moveable farm stock, must, when fairly looked at, be seen to be quite illusory. No banking or other reputable lending agency would touch, or ever does touch it ; and no one who knows what the vicissitudes risks and losses of Highland sheep farming are,—the mortality from ordinary and abnormal causes ; the variableness of markets ; the incompetence, or it may be the dishonesty of management ; and such like, can entertain any doubt that in eschewing such transactions lenders are right. Even over the buildings provided from such loans, good and substantial as these might be, the security would be more or less insufficient. It would depend entirely on the energy, prosperity, and honesty of the borrower ; in other words, on the established success of the scheme of plantation of crofters now being considered, an issue which is very extensively doubted, and which to say the least, is far from being assured. Upon failure or miscarriage of this crofter enterprise the security for these loans, even over the buildings, would disappear, for if these buildings, with the other provisions of crofting equipment, were not wanted for such a purpose, they could not be used for any other.

Such is a financial view of this question as it would affect the crofter, and him only; but, as already said, there are other important interests which cannot be left out of account. The interest of the landlord, who of all persons would be most affected, is to a certain extent involved in the estimates above stated; but he is in other respects deeply concerned. He is concerned as an owner, who would not only have his ownership seriously compromised by a forcible plantation of tenants upon his property, whom he did not want, and whom his existing tenants did not want; but by the same operation he would be so fettered in the management of those parts of his property,—sheep farms or deer forests,—which were not appropriated to crofters, that overwhelming loss to him from that cause would very probably ensue. This, as well as the interest of the general body of ratepayers in these proposals, I propose to consider at a later stage. Here I will only further point out that the cost of migrating and settling crofters would not end with the provision of houses and other farming equipments, wherever, at least, a township or community of crofters was established. For all such places a road communicating with the nearest existing highway would have to be formed and upheld; a school would have to be erected and maintained; provision would have to be made for the functions of the parish doctor and sanitary inspector, all matters which would involve a large capital and annual outlay, falling upon the county and local rates.

In dealing with the subject of local migration of crofters it will be obviously advantageous to examine any actual examples of this which may have recently occurred. For practical purposes it is difficult to obtain this advantage, for the known cases, either under voluntary agreements between proprietors and crofters, or under the statutory powers conferred upon the Crofters Commission, are few. It is significant that applications by crofters for more land under the Crofters Act, 1886, have not been more numerous if there be truth in the statements sometimes heard, that more land is so much desired by them. From the establishment of the Crofters Commission in 1886 down to the end of 1893 only 564 applications from crofters for extensions of holdings have been lodged, while no fewer than 18,269 applications have been received for the fixing of 'fair rent,' of which 17,790 have already been disposed of. It is also suggestive that of these 564 applications for more land only 8 related to land in deer forests, the remainder presumably applying to land devoted to sheep and other purposes. Thus the total number of applications for enlargement of holdings was only 3 per cent. of the total number of applications for revision of rent; and the total number of applications for more land to be taken from deer forests was only 1·4 per cent. of the total number of applications for more land from other sources.

To account for these facts, which challenge attention, it has been stated that the fewness of official applications for enlargements of holdings is due to the restrictive statutory conditions under which these operations are effected. There is, however, some reason to doubt this, the conditions of enlargement of holdings are specified in Sections 11 to 15 of the Crofters Holdings Act, 1886, and were fully discussed in committee while the measure was before Parliament. The Act was introduced and carried by Mr Gladstone's government, upon whom these provisions for extension of crofters' holdings were strenuously and successfully pressed by the representatives of the crofters in the House of Commons.

In liberality to crofters they are far in excess of the original proposals of the Bill, and were looked upon then as having curtailed to an 'irreducible minimum' the powers and position of the owners of crofting land within the area to which the Act extended. The Secretary for Scotland and the Law Officers of Scotland who conducted the Act of 1886 through the legislature, were the same gentlemen as fill these offices now, with one recent exception, and there is reason to believe that it was not without hesitation that they consented to widen to their present dimensions the original provisions of the Bill with respect to enlargement of holdings. Be that as it may, the fact is undeniable that only an insignificant number of crofters have applied under the Statute for additional or enlarged holdings. There has been no combined, considerable, or conclusive manifestation among the crofter class of a desire to forsake their present locations for homes or holdings in other, and it might be, distant parts of the Highlands, where the conditions of removal would entail as great a wrench of old associations and attachments, and as much initiatory anxiety, as emigration to another continent would. It is probable that a consciousness of hopeless inability to stock and carry on new or enlarged holdings may have mainly induced this indifference of crofters to local migration, at all events there is not sufficient evidence that they have been deterred by the statutory conditions regulating the process.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

These remarks, of course, refer to the past, and to the existing state of the law; but it must be admitted that any scheme of migration of crofters providing for new as well as enlarged holdings, must include a relaxation of the restriction that lands for such purpose must be upon the same estate, or in an adjoining parish to that in which the applicants reside at the date of their application. It may be added that another of the conditions applied to enlargement of holdings by the Act of 1886, viz., that sheep farms then under lease were not to be available, has become practically inoperative by the lapse of time.

The cases of enlargement of holdings under the Crofters Holdings Act, 1886, are so few and so recent that it would hardly be prudent to generalise from them, though the many instances of inability or unwillingness to pay 'fair rents' which have come under the cognisance of this Commission do not give an encouraging view of success.

There are, however, some cases of the kind of longer standing, the outcome of private and voluntary treaty, which it will be useful to look into.

On the Macleod estates in Skye, several experiments of the breaking up of sheep farms for sub-division into crofts have been tried by the present proprietor. An early instance of this kind was Glendale; and somewhat prominent evidence of the poverty of the inhabitants of this place has been before the public for some years. Another was the partitioning of the farm of Ullinish in Bracadale. It was let in common to five tenants. They were men of some resources, they built houses, and with the assistance of the proprietor purchased stock. Yet they have not prospered. The original rent of £200 which these tenants accepted as fair, was soon, at their request, reduced to £150, then to £100, and now they desire to be released altogether. Of the advance of £1000 made by the proprietor to them at entry, evidence has been laid before this Commission that very little has been repaid. A third instance was at Roag, where Macleod had eight crofts of 10 acres each laid out and fenced. These crofters have a large extent of hill pasture. The cumulo rent of £70 is considered low, yet this adventure has also been a failure, and the tenants are already considerably in arrears. In 1883, Lady Gordon Cathcart declined an offer of £131, 5s. from an eligible tenant for the farm of Bentangaval, in the island of Barra, in order that she might divide it for crofters. It extends to 1750 acres, and it was apportioned among forty-five crofters. Of these only thirty-five took up their lots. The result has been a complete failure. The total rent was £133. Only £70, 13s. 8d. of this was paid even in the first year, but much worse remains. During the six years ended at Whitsunday, 1891, only £68, 1s. 9d. of rent was received, while the amount exclusive of interest which should have been received was £798—the arrears in this case amounted at the end of the seventh year to £792, 4s. 7d. Another experiment of this kind in Barra by Lady Gordon Cathcart was Allasdale. It was divided among seven crofters at a total rent of £110. The fittest persons in the island were selected for these large crofts; the land was excellent, and everything was done by the estate to promote their success. They have been in possession for fully ten years, but this venture has also turned out a failure. Of the total rent accruing during these ten years not one half has been paid; very large abatements have been made, yet still a very large amount is in arrear, and this notwithstanding the fact that at the end of the fifth year the rent was reduced to £80 or about 27 per cent. Other experiments of the same nature in the islands of Benbecula and Barra by Lady Gordon Cathcart have proved equally disappointing. The general condition of the crofter tenantry on the West Highland estates of Lady Gordon Cathcart may be gauged by the fact that at the end of 1892 close upon £1000 of arrears of fair rents were due—an accumulation of only three or four years, in contempt of the authority of the Crofters Commission.

Another case of the conversion of sheep farm grazing into crofter holdings may be quoted from the Lews. At Martinmas 1885, a tract of land extending to 4486 acres was disjoined from the farm of Park and offered to three or four tenants. At that time no small tenants able to take and stock these holdings could be got, but ultimately it was let to six tenants at a total rent of £51. A rent of £70 from one tenant was refused in order that the crofter experiment might be tried. Here again the same tale of deep arrears and voluntary retirement of some of the tenants is heard.

Turning to the mainland a few instances of the results of extending or creating new crofter holdings may be given. A case in the west of Sutherland is specially interesting as having occurred since 1886, and been conducted under the orders of the Crofters Commission. In 1888, on the application of a number of crofters, parts of the farms of Oldney, Achmore, Ardvar, and Clashmore, and of Glencanisp deer forest, in all to the extent of about 12 acres arable and 6508 acres hill pasture, was broken up under an order of the Crofters Commission, and partitioned among 210 crofters at a cumulo 'fair rent' of £174, 19s. 9d. The landlord was ordered to supply fencing materials for about six miles, costing £440, 15s. 9d, and the crofters were ordered to erect these fences before taking possession of the land. Now, how were these operations carried out, and with what results? At Achmore, on receipt of the order of the Crofters Commission, a hirsel of this farm was cleared of sheep, but nine of the twenty-two crofters to whom this land had been appropriated at once repudiated the transaction alleging that they had been deluded into the application for it by a neighbour, and petitioned the landlord to retake these nine shares of the ground, from which on their urgent appeal, he had just removed the sheep stock and the shepherds. Matters remained in abeyance till 1891 when the Commissioners returned to see how their orders had been carried out. The Commissioners withdrew this land from the nine repudiating crofters, and gave it to the others, but no rent was obtained for the same for two years.

At Nedd, where additional ground to the extent of 434 acres had been given, the Commissioners found that the fence ordered to be erected by Whitsunday, 1889, had not been completed, and that consequently possession of the ground could not be taken. They withdrew the share of land assigned to two of the crofters, and extended the time for completing the fence to the others till Whitsunday, 1892. It is believed that it has not yet been passed by the Commission and meantime no rent has been paid for this enlargement.

52,547. Mr Sutherland.—Which enlargement is that?—It is a place called Nedd.

52,548. What is your authority for making the statement?—I have the authority of the estate, and have the documents with me.

52,549. Are you aware that that matter was before us at Lochinver?—No, I do not know; I am only giving it as illustrating my own position.

52,550. But if your illustration is not according to fact, it will materially interfere with your argument?—I give the facts as they were given me by the estate authorities, I do not go farther than that.

52,551. Who is your authority for making that statement with regard to Ardvar?—Mr Maciver, Scourie.

In the townships of Inverkirkaig and Strathan twenty-eight crofters had their holdings enlarged by 702 acres pasture land withdrawn from Glencanisp deer forest. As a first result the shooting-tenant renounced his lease, causing a loss of £300 a year to the landlord. In this case also, when the Crofter Commissioners returned, they found that the crofters had failed to erect the fence as ordered. Five of the twenty-eight crofters to whom this land had been assigned two years before, now threw up their shares, as they could not stock them, and these shares are vacant still. Possession of this ground ordered at Whitsunday, 1889, was not taken till Martinmas, 1891, and no rent was received during that interval.

The financial result to the landlord of this operation has for the past four years been a loss of upwards of £1600. Of 'fair rents' amounting to £700, which ought to have been paid, only £315 was paid, and £385 is in arrear. Other difficulties have occurred in almost every township concerned, and it is beyond doubt that many of the crofters who participated in this transaction thought better of it in anticipation than they do now.

Further attempts to establish new colonies of crofters by breaking up grazings and farms at Attadale, Letterewe, &c. might be quoted upon which the same comment of disheartening failure would have to be repeated, but sufficient illustration of the system has been made. Not only are these tenants doing badly in their crofts, and glad to escape from their obligations when they can, but it would seem to be equally true of many of the older crofter tenants, who, far from desiring additions to their holdings, are seeking to throw up what they have, if only they could see their way to a better condition in life.

These notes of past endeavours to settle small tenants successfully in the Highlands by way of migration, would not, however, be complete without some reference to the gigantic land reclamation works which were carried out a few years ago, in Sutherland, by the late Duke of that name. Although the land in this case was not intended, or at least chiefly intended, for crofter occupation, its history has a very pertinent bearing on what has been advanced in these pages. Upwards of a quarter of a million sterling was expended by the late Duke of Sutherland in this enterprise. The latest and finest appliances of agricultural science were brought to bear upon it; special implements for the breaking up, draining, and pulverising of land were invented for it; the best fertilising agents were applied to it, and every known means of making the venture a complete success were lavished upon it, and what was the result? The Duke's representative on being asked, when Lord Napier's Commission sat in Sutherland, what had been the increase of returns in connection with this great expenditure, replied that on the reclamations it was nil. What is the result now? The answer may be given by quoting a short paragraph from the Reports of the Agricultural Department. In remarking upon a striking diminution of 7000 acres in the area under cultivation in Sutherland, the editor says:—'This is 'due to the circumstance that a large tract of land, 'altogether occupying an area of this extent, which 'had recently been reclaimed in order to bring it 'under cultivation had been found quite unfit for 'crops of the ordinary kind, or for the superior 'description of grasses, and that it could only be kept 'under rotation of crops by a costly system of

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

'manuring it. It has therefore been allowed to run 'out of cultivation, and will again, as formerly be 'classed as mountain land.' Surely there is here an impressive and unmistakeable warning against attempts at cultivation in the face of elemental forces, which have written impossible upon them. If such has been the actual and inevitable outcome of an experiment conceived with all the foresight, and conducted with all the skill and experience which could be brought to bear on it; conducted moreover in a part of the Highlands where the rainfall is by comparison not excessive, much more so will it be with similar attempts in situations more obviously unsuitable.

So many failures of recent crofter partnerships such as have been described, suggest an observation or two about crofter club farms, and the considerations in favour of or in opposition to a possible extension of this system of farming in the Highlands. First of all it ought to be stated that the number of existing bona fide club farms occupied and conducted by crofters is small. There are hundreds of instances of grazing and crofter rights or privileges, other than stocks and arable lands, being used in common, but the cases on the mainland and in the Hebrides of community of stock (under one mark) as well as pasture are very few. Nor does it appear from the history of small tenancies or crofts since these began to be held directly from the landlord that farms or holdings held in common were ever numerous in this stated area.

There must be a reason for this,—where does it lie? Is it not in the well-known rule of everyday example, that what a man himself exclusively owns and manages is, with very few exceptions, more successfully treated than where the subject is managed, but not owned, by another, or by a community? In general, but especially in agriculture, there is an incentive to diligence, prudence, promptness, and painstaking in the operations of the individual which belongs not to the commune. Thus it is that club crofter farms have rarely been successful. A partner, or it may be more than one, falls into financial trouble, or he has a difference with his partners on some point of management perhaps, and complications at once ensue. The management is hampered, and stock diminishes and deteriorates, till the whole concern is involved in stringency and probable failure. Indolent and ineffective management, — jealousies and differences about marketings,—the absence of individual independent energy, and, on the other hand, the presence of a listless haphazard 'common' interest in the concern, have too often landed the club farm in disaster. If there have been any cases of apparently or temporarily successful club farms among crofters, it will, I think, be generally found that they have arisen from bounties or concessions by the landlord upon the foundation of the club, rather than from inherent elements of success and self-made effort. At the best, the level of attainable individual prosperity is, under the necessary rules and limitations of these combinations, a very humble one, and, it is to be feared, may not be improved. It is a hard and fast system, without elasticity or capability of advancing its members to a higher plane of social conditions.

For these reasons the club farm has little popularity among crofters themselves, and is favoured by few indeed among those who are practically concerned with the ownership or management of Highland estates.

Thus far these observations on increase of crofters' holdings have been mainly directed to its practicability from the crofter's side of the question. If a comprehensive and systematic policy of crofter extension combined with local migration, on the lines submitted to the Royal Commission, can be shown to be impracticable, there is nothing more to be said. I venture to think that the considerations, physical, climatical, and financial, which have been here advanced, strongly support the negative conclusion, but as these opinions, the soundness of which I believe will be amply demonstrated should they ever be tested in practice, may not at present be generally accepted, I will for the moment assume the feasibility of a large measure of crofter extension by means of migration, and inquire for a little into its desirability. There are very weighty interests which demand equal consideration to those of the crofters. There is the particular and definite interest of the landlord, and there are general interests in which the whole body politic is concerned. It will not be disputed that the proposals under consideration ought not to be proceeded with, or at least that they will not rest upon an equitable basis, unless they can be carried out to the common advantage. Legislation for a class has deservedly fallen into disfavour, and it ought not to be revived in this particular case unless under stress and compulsion of overwhelming reasons.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

Referring first to the effect that a general scheme of plantation of crofts upon lands presently dedicated to other purposes would have upon the estates and means of the landlords, the influence which this would exercise upon the remaining parts of the holdings whence these crofts had been obtained, claims attention at the outset. Whether this is considered in its effects upon the deer forest or the sheep farm, such knowledge and experience as I have acquired during a long and constant residence in the North-West Highlands constrain me to say that if you took from such subjects the arable or cultivable land, together with all or most of the low-lying pasture land, and thus limited your sheep or deer to the pasturage of the higher lands, letting them have no access to food or water under an altitude of 1000, 700, or even 500 feet, you would create a condition of things which would extinguish both sheep farms and deer forests as valuable subjects. The rationale of this is very simple. Neither deer nor sheep can live, or ever have lived, on the higher mountain ranges of the Highlands all the year round. By far the greater area in the Highlands is over 1000 feet above the sea, and it need not be said that this is not only far above the range of profitable cultivation in that region, but is likewise beyond the limit of grazing during the winter months. Further, the extent of land dedicated to deer forests and sheep farms below 1000 feet level, bears a small proportion, —certainly not more than one-fifth,—to the extent above that altitude; and it is not too much to say that all this enormous area above 1000 feet, or whatever height may be assumed to be the limit of possible grazing in winter, amounting within the crofter area to 5 or 6 millions of acres, or as much of it at least as had been bereft of arable and low pasture land, would practically fall into disuse. It would be of little or no value as a lettable subject, and most of it would revert to waste, as indeed it was prior to the introduction of the modern system of sheep farming. Why and how this would happen may be looked at a little more closely.

First as respects sheep farms. From the seventeenth century, further than which it is not material to carry this inquiry, till the last quarter of the eighteenth century when the improved mode of sheep farming began to find a home in the Highlands, land was held under three different forms of occupation. It was either let (1) to tacksmen who personally occupied it, and kept around them a number of 'Scallags' or cottars; or (2) to tacksmen who were merely middlemen and sublet the land to tenants of inferior grade; or (3) to groups of joint-tenants holding directly from the proprietor (Skene's Celtic Scotland, Vol. III., p. 370). But it must be remembered that before the advent of systematic sheep farming under large holdings, occupation or at least profitable use of land in the Highlands, was confined to the lower ranges. There was no attempt at regular grazing on the higher ranges. In these days, says Skene 'the 'great mountain ranges and the groups of larger hills 'either formed deer forests or lay waste.' Another eminent authority has estimated that 'the intro-'duction of sheep farming into the Highlands was 'equivalent to the reclamation from pure loss and 'waste of somewhere about nine-tenths of all the 'mountain area,' and adds that 'when it was dis- 'covered for the first time about 1793, that the 'modern breeds of sheep could live and thrive on the 'Highland mountains all the year round, a great 'portion of the country was as much redeemed and 'reclaimed for the use of man as if it had been lifted 'from the bottom of the sea.' Occasional reference is made in present days to utilization of the higher grazings in former times, before the sheep farming era, when it was customary for some of the inhabitants of Highland townships, especially the females, to remove with their cattle to 'sheilings,' which were at some distance from, and usually at a higher altitude than the township or home grazings. But these sheilings or summer grazings, the situation and boundaries of many of which are still traceable, were not only of limited extent,—and generally at altitudes far below the uppermost grazings, but were always composed of the choicest portions of pasture, as was natural where the choice was so large in those merely cattle grazing days, and the occupation only for a few weeks of the year. The prime object of these brief migrations was the husbanding of the pastures at the homesteads or townships for support of the cattle during the long and rigorous winter and spring seasons,—a practice which confirms the observation, elsewhere made, that no form of profitable use of these mountainous and stormy regions is possible without a varying proportion of low-lying ground of good quality as a refuge and resource for stock when the upper pastures are inaccessible. In those old days almost the only live stock kept in the Highlands were the native cattle, still well-known, and a few sheep of indigenous breed which for more than a century have been quite discarded. But only the lower walks of the pastures were frequented even by these hardy cattle; there were millions of acres, affording an untold extent of valuable pasturage, of which no agricultural or economic use was ever made. Further there were, and still are, many thousands of acres of ground so rocky and precipitous as to be absolutely inaccessible. Such ground has never been nor ever will be trodden by man or beast, a fact which ought to be taken into account when reference is made to the extent and character of the land devoted to deer forests.

For a long period after its introduction into the Highlands sheep farming enjoyed unbroken prosperity. Men endowed with capital and special knowledge of this branch of agriculture were attracted from the lowland and border districts to the Highlands, where opportunities were available of acquiring extensive sheep walks at very moderate rents. In those early days 'foreign competition' in this line of business had practically no existence. Importations of foreign or colonial wool were then of little moment, and the idea of importing meat, dead or alive, fresh, chilled, or frozen, from abroad had not even been started. But by-and-bye changes occurred. The importation of wool, which fifty years ago was quite inconsiderable, has now expanded to the prodigious quantity of 671,663,194 lbs. The total importation of butcher meat, which in the end of last century was practically nil, has now (1893) reached the enormous figure of 9,306,804 cwts. or 465,340 tons. No fewer than eighty-eight fast steam vessels fitted with the latest refrigerating machinery, and having an annual carrying capacity of 6,700,000 carcases are now engaged in this business. Nor is this very extensive transfer of foreign and colonial produce for consumption in the British Isles effected at the cost of a diminution of the live stocks of the foreign and colonial countries concerned. The contrary appears to be the case. For example, while the sheep returns of New Zealand stood at 16,753,752 in 1891, they were 19,357,000 in 1893, an increase, in spite of all exportations, of 2,603,248. Another development of the trade in foreign and colonial farm food stuffs are the remarkably successful consignments of butter during the past year. During the current year (1893) the exports of this article from Victoria alone will it is anticipated, not be under 3000 tons. In short, so easy and certain has the transport of perishable produce from even the ends of the earth become through the discoveries of science and the enterprise of capitalists, that no limit may now be set to further developments in this direction.

As these importations of wool and meat grew in volume and value, markets fluctuated, and were now and then greatly disordered by excessive imports due to the operations of speculators, or the vagaries of fashion in woollen fabrics. A gradual decline of this great and vital Highland industry has ensued, so that everywhere sheep farming tenants,—especially those of southern origin,—are manifesting a very decided desire to escape from this business. The most desirable sheep farms of a quarter of a century ago,—such as, when open to be let, drew quite an embarrassment of competitive offers,—are now neglected, or can only be let, with all their natural advantages, on terms very much reduced,—in some cases the reduction being to less than half the former rents. Especially is this the case with respect to wedder farms. The expenses of rearing and supporting during winter and spring when the upper pastures are not available this class of sheep, have so absorbed all profit, or so often led to loss, that now it is hardly possible to let a purely wedder farm at all. Herein lies one of the chief reasons for the formation of additional deer forests within the last decade, a fact which will be more fully noticed at a later part of this statement. What it is wished here specially to point out,—if indeed it is not self-evident,—is, that if amid the stress of a depression of sheep farming, so deep and universal as to threaten abandonment of this industry altogether over a great part of the Highlands, that part of the land is withdrawn, viz.:—the arable and low-lying pasture upon which are supported the ewe stocks, which alone render a continuance of sheep farming under present conditions possible, a paralysis of this business must ensue. Such a calamity it might be said would at the worst be only partial, for not all the ewe ground and arable ground would be taken away; to which the obvious answer would be that if this were to be the only remedy or provision for congestion of the crofter population, the available supply of such land would be far short of the necessity. It is, however, hard to accept the possibility of any movement which would involve the ruin of the supreme industry of the Highlands, in order to clear the way for a social experiment of vastly little importance when compared with the great interests it would supplant, and which there are grave reasons to fear would itself eventuate in a failure disastrous to all concerned.

If such would be the effect upon sheep farms of a withdrawal from them of the ground which is alone capable of wintering stock, the same would apply with redoubled force to the lands occupied as deer forests. With rare exceptions deer forest land runs to a much greater altitude than sheep grazing land, and is generally of a more rugged and mountainous character. The deer forests contain little arable ground, and much less low-lying pasture land than sheep farms. Of 130 deer forests appearing in the Parliamentary Return of 1891, no fewer than 126 reach an altitude of over 1000 feet; 106 exceed 2000 feet; 61 exceed 3000 feet; and 7 exceed 4000 feet; the highest being 4248 feet. On the other hand, only 31 descend to the level of the sea. Sea-level when west coast grazings are referred to not uncommonly conveys an erroneous impression of the value of such grazings to those who are not acquainted with those parts. It might be supposed that along the verge of the sea, at least, there would always be a belt of sweet green pasture, invaluable for the winter support of grazing stock; but in not a few cases this would be a fallacious inference. In some cases the rugged, rocky conformation of these lands extends sheer down to the water's edge, so precipitous, indeed, as to be quite inaccessible to animals, and totally uninhabitable by man.

It may be desirable to examine this feature of deer forests a little more closely, seeing that much misconception of their character, and ignorance of their capabilities still prevail. For this purpose inspection is invited of the map of deer forests which I submit. It will there be found that within the region marked off by the lines coloured red, an enormous preponderance of deer forest ground is situated. It will likewise be noticed that a very large proportion of this ground lies within the locality denoted by the parallelogram on the left or west side of the map, which is the district distinguished far above all others in the United Kingdom for altitude, ruggedness, sterility, and humidity. Unblessed by nature in an agricultural sense, swept and ravaged by frequent storms, and deluged by a nearly incessant rainfall, in very truth little of such land is capable of being put to human use or habitation of man during the more inhospitable months. It is, in fact, fit for no other purpose than that to which it is now devoted.

There is another test which may be applied to deer forest land and which strikingly confirms its comparative worthlessness. There is here submitted a short table showing, First, the total number of deer forests in each of the counties now under consideration. Second, the total acreage of each and all these counties. Third, the acreage of land afforested in each and all these counties. Fourth, the percentage of afforested land. Fifth, the average rent per acre of each of these counties. And Sixth, the average rent per acre of the deer forests within these counties.

A glance at this table is calculated to dispel many fallacies as to the extent of land dedicated to the maintenance of deer, and as to its character and value.

From this table, and from the table of more detailed 'particulars of deer forests in Scotland' forming an appendix to this statement, it will be seen that in Argyllshire there are eleven deer forests ranging from 1500 to 3776 feet of maximum altitude; that nine of these touch sea-level, five of the nine being, however, islands; and that even in this county a very large preponderance of the land afforested is over 500 feet above the sea. In Inverness-shire, with its forty-four deer forests, the maximum height of the land various from 1386 to 4248 feet (excluding Arisaig and Skaebost, which are fenced deer parks, and exceptional in the Highlands). But here perhaps the most sterile and valueless land in an agricultural view is found; twenty-six of these deer forests or 60 per cent. attain an altitude of 3000 feet and over and no fewer than 39 or 90 per cent. exceed 2000 feet. Ten of these forty-four Inverness-shire deer forests touch the sea. Of these five are insular and five have a seaboard of the most rocky and absolutely unimprovable character. In the county of Inverness there are eighteen deer forests which are over 500 feet at their lowest level. The area of these is 428,657 acres, being 47½ per cent. of the whole afforested bounds. Ross and Cromarty contains forty-six deer forests, varying from 223 to 3637 of maximum in height. In this county nine deer forests, five of which are insular, touch the sea. The very small forest of Arnish, in the Lews, which attains to no greater height than 223 feet, must be looked upon as a very uncommon case, in proof of which it may be stated, that there are in this county fifteen deer forests with a minimum altitude of 500 feet and an extent of 196,988 acres, being nearly one quarter of the whole afforested area. Sutherlandshire has eight deer forests ranging from 1706 to 2952 of maximum height above the sea; of these two fall to sea-level, but an overwhelming proportion of the afforested area lies above the 500 feet line. Caithness has only one deer forest, with a maximum of 2312 and a minimum of 100 feet above sea-level. The extent of arable land in all these 110 deer forests is less than 3000 acres, and the extent of land below 500 feet is comparatively small, in all probability not more than 12 per cent., whence a suggestive view of the agricultural value of deer forests as a whole may be obtained.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

Glancing now at the rents of these afforested lands, the view is not less hopeless. While the average rent per acre for the whole of Argyll is 4s. 1¾d.,—the land afforested is only worth 8d. per acre. For Inverness the average rent per acre is 2s, 4d., and the deer forest rent per acre 10½d. For Ross and Cromarty the average rent per acre is 2s. 9¾d., and the deer forest rent per acre 11¼d. In Sutherland the average rent per acre is 1s. 6½d., and the deer forest rent 7½d. per acre. And in Caithness while the average rent per acre is 5s. 6¼., that of the deer forest is 1s. 6¾d. While the average rent per acre of the counties of Argyll, Inverness, Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness, considered together is 3s. 3¼d., that of the deer forest area in the same counties is only 11¼. Comparisons are here limited to those counties containing deer forests which are within the scope of the Royal Commission, but if similar comparisons were made in the other deer forest counties, viz.:—Aberdeen, Banff, Bute, Forfar, and Perth, still greater differences between the value of afforested land and land otherwise occupied would be brought out, proving conclusively that only the poorest land is devoted to deer in any of these counties.

From these facts,—which I believe to be indisputable,—the conclusion is irresistible, that withdrawal of the arable land from deer forests,—very limited as it is,—and withdrawal at same time of the lower pasture ground, say under 500 feet level, would be fatal to these institutions. The red deer is a hardy animal, and is perhaps better able to endure the privations of hunger or inclemency of weather than the hardiest breeds of sheep, but though, during the milder portion of the year, he seeks the highest mountain retreats, he is compelled, in common with every four-footed animal in the British Isles, to betake himself during winter to the lower expanses, where alone shelter and herbage can then be obtained.

But some one may say 'could not those higher 'grazings in sheep farms and deer forests be brought 'into account for the support of temporary or flying 'stocks of cattle or sheep during summer and 'autumn'? This is not in a physical sense impossible, but the important element of such a question is, would it pay? Light temporary or flying stocks invariably mean light rents. In this case they would mean insignificant rents compared with the rents obtained for deer forests under the present system, much of these steep and lofty grazings never could be reached by cattle, while the impossibility of wintering either cattle or sheep without access to the low grounds, and the uncertainty and risk attending the only alternative to this, viz.:—selling off the stocks before winter, would be so serious that even upon the most favourable rent arrangements very few persons would be induced to embark in such a business. Further, an enormous extent of fencing to keep separate the permanent stocks of the crofters from the roving or flying stocks, would be required, the cost of which can be appreciated only by those who are acquainted with the extremely irregular conformation of the ground in question. When it is suggested that a hard and fast line,—be it 500 or be it 1000 feet above the sea-level,—below which there should be no afforested ground, should be adopted, it is evident that the extremely tortuous lines of the coast, and the suddenly varying levels of ground which characterise the Highlands, are not understood. Argyllshire, alone, with its islands, presents a coast line of 2289 miles. Adherence to a given level would frequently necessitate three or four miles of fence for each mile 'as the crow flies;' and upon such a basis the fencing of upper from lower lands would be extremely absurd and, indeed, financially impracticable. A 'give 'and take' line here excluding and there including portions of ground on either side of the ideal line, would be absolutely unavoidable.

If, then, the proposals under consideration of the Royal Commission, viz:—withdrawal of the arable land, and the more accessible and valuable low-lying pasture land, from sheep farms and deer forests for the purpose named in the reference to the Commission, would be incompatible with the continued prosperity, or probably, the very existence of these concerns, it is proper to inquire what the effects of their suppression or decay would be.

First, a word or two may be said as to the probable extent of this economic revolution. Ten years ago it was estimated by the Napier Commission that the crofter and cottar population of the area then, as now under consideration, numbered about 200,000 souls, or probably about 40,000 families (Report, p. 108); and the census of 1891 has revealed the fact, which had been previously suspected, that the congested districts, such as Lewis and some parts of Skye, have increased considerably in population between 1881 and 1891, and are consequently more congested now than ever. This, taken in connection with the minimum quantity of land which by common agreement would be required for the establishment of each new croft, makes it evident that upon any plan of re-partition of the land among the whole of the congested crofter and cottar inhabitants, not only would all the arable land and all the adjacent low-lying pasture land of sheep farms and deer forests in these counties be absorbed for such a purpose, but it would not nearly meet the necessities of the case.

The great sheep farming industry has, it will not be disputed, exercised an enormous influence in the marvellous development of the Highlands during the present century. No interest in the Western and Northern parts, at all events, approaches it in importance, and none has done more for the Highland people. From inflexible economic causes sheep farming has been for sometime, and is at present greatly depressed, but that this is not an irrecoverable condition may be inferred from the fact, that the number of sheep within the United Kingdom is growing,—there having been an increase of 1,454,370 within the last two years, to which all parts of the country have contributed. In the six counties forming the field of this inquiry, the number of sheep has remained almost stationary within the same period. So important and indispensable to the welfare of the Highlands does this great interest remain, even in its presently less flourishing condition, that the evils which would result from its permanent downfall need no demonstration, and I pass on to consider the effects which would ensue upon a serious curtailment or extinction of deer forests.

The origin, extent, attributes, and influence of deer forests have been much canvassed within the past few years, and few questions have elicited in their discussion evidence of so much misconception. Deer forests have been involved inextricably in the crofter controversy; and though it is now universally admitted that they have not been the cause of evictions, or led to the depopulation in any wise, yet they have been denounced on other pretences equally by persons who clearly knew little or nothing about them, and by hired agitators on crofter platforms, who have hesitated not to permit their zeal to over-ride their accuracy. Deer forests have been described, sometimes in ignorance and sometimes in malice, as the fruit of the riches and luxurious idleness of the latter half of the present century; and the outcome of gilded temptations offered by a southern plutocracy to a financially feeble Highland proprietary. But such has by no means been the case; at all events, it is a statement which requires considerable qualification. Deer forests are not a growth of yesterday. Evidences and records of these institutions may be found in abundance as far back as the sixteenth century. It has been computed that of 130 deer forests now in existence as stated in the Parliamentary Return of 1891, at least twenty have existed from time immemorial; that fifty-nine were formed between the beginning of the present century and 1872, when, in course of a Parliamentary Inquiry into the Game Laws of Scotland, the full number of deer forests was found to be seventy-nine; that thirty more were formed between 1872 and 1883, when the Royal Commission of the latter year ascertained the total number of deer forests to be 109; leaving twenty-one as the number formed from 1883 to the latest official Return in 1891.

With regard to the area occupied by deer forests similar error has prevailed. Very exaggerated statements as to this were current till the appearance of the Report of the Royal Commission of 1883, when it was seen that the exact extent of the 109 deer forests then scheduled was 1,955,209 acres.

The Return of deer forests in 1891 brought the number up to 130, and increased the acreage to 2,552,383; but in this return, hastily prepared as it was, there is grave reason to suspect many inaccuracies. For example,—while in the return of 1883 the extent of each forest is clearly headed 'Area in Statute 'Acres,' with replies that are believed to be correct, the corresponding column in the return of 1891 is headed 'Estimated Extent' with figures following, which are in many cases mere haphazard estimates indeed. Here in no fewer than sixty-five cases, being exactly one-half of the whole, the acreage is stated in round figures terminating in three ciphers. In several cases alternative areas, differing to the extent of 5000 acres, are stated. In seventy-two cases common to both returns the acreage set down in 1891 differs from the acreage stated in 1883. In forty-nine of these cases the areas are larger in the return of 1891 to the extent in cumulo of . . . . 319,900 acres
In the remaining twenty-three cases the areas are less to the extent of 43,786

Leaving an unaccounted-for difference of 276,114

Nor is this all: the Return of 1891 contains a number of deer forests which are stated to have been formed prior to 1883, yet they do not appear in the Return of that year. The Return of 1891 also contains a number of places, which, as may be shown by evidence, are not, and never were, deer forests in the true sense. There are unexplained discrepancies, too, between the Returns of 1883 and 1891, with respect to altitudes of the forests,—both the highest and the lowest. The Return of 1891 shows thirty-one deer forests as descending to the sea-level, but in none of these cases is the length of coast line stated. In many of these cases the line of contact with the sea is very short, and in others the contiguity is upon a rock-bound and uninhabitable coast. The list of deer forests prepared in 1883 by Lord Napier's Commission was a careful, deliberate, and workmanlike production evolved from reliable materials, and believed to be singularly free from gross mistakes; but from the circumstances above mentioned, and other internal evidence, the conclusion cannot be avoided that the Return of 1891 is not a reliable document.

So also has it been with respect to the qualities of these deer forests; their benefits or their disadvantages. Prior to 1883 uninstructed criticism may be said to have held the field, but since the publication of the able Report of the Royal Commission of that year a better state of public knowledge and of public opinion has prevailed. Not now, for example, it is ever stated that 'clearances' of population were made to make way for the formation of deer forests. All uneasiness in regard to this was removed from the public mind on the appearance of the Report of 1883. Statements to the opposite effect are to be found in the Appendices to that Report, but these, not having been supported by evidence, or tested by examination in presence of the Commissioners, are of no authoritative value; and the Commissioners, giving weight only to the evidence received in the usual manner, reported 'that during the course of their inquiry they had only 'come upon one clearly established case in evidence 'of the removal of crofters for the purpose of adding 'to an already existing deer forest.' (Report, p. 84).

But though responsibility for removals of the population cannot be truthfully laid to the charge of deer forests, the dedication of so much land to purposes of sport has not entirely escaped condemnation, both on economic and on sentimental grounds. Here again, however, a due appreciation of the circumstances and the motives which have induced the owners of these properties to adopt the course of afforesting them will, in nearly every case, compel the candid inquirer to admit that not only was there no other course open to these gentlemen, but that the course adopted has been for the best in the public interest as well as their own. The severe and protracted depression in sheep farming has in many cases compelled the owners of high wedder land either to afforest it or let it lie tenantless, rentless, and useless. Take a typical case; a large sheep farm, probably carrying 5000 sheep, falls out of lease. The outgoing tenant has intimated that he does not desire a renewal of the lease, and the farm is consequently advertised to be let. No offers for it are forthcoming,—a common experience in these times. In such a case the proprietor, if he ventures to take the farm into his own occupancy, is obliged at the outset to find a capital of £10,000 or £12,000 wherewith to buy the sheep stock on the holding. He is very probably obliged to borrow this amount, at a high rate of interest, and upon security other than the sheep stock itself, which, as elsewhere stated, no financier will accept as sole security for an advance. He may be in a position precluding him from even this expedient; and at the best he knows there is no probability, under the financial burden thus imposed, and in view of the unprofitableness of sheep farming, of his carrying on the farm successfully. He is therefore pressed into a very tight corner, out of which the only means of escape is through afforestment of the farm. What else could he have done, or ought he to have done than embrace this mode of relief? He thereby saves and benefits himself no doubt, and self preservation is the primary law of nature, but he benefits his neighbours as well. He secures a substantial rent, and thereby not only prevents the increase of local taxation, which would obviously occur were the farm unlet, or let at a largely reduced rent, but he actually contributes to the amelioration of the taxes then existing, besides having brought into the district a new source of employments for the local population. Such is the description of a case by no means uncommon in the history of the development of deer forests of the later era. Of the twenty-one forests formed since 1883 many have originated in circumstances such as have been here described.

It is hardly necessary to repeat the observation here that upon the food supply of the nation, or even upon local food markets, deer forests exercise practically no influence. The loss of meat by the displacement of stock in all the deer forests in existence is but the fraction of a fraction of the total consumption of meat by the nation. So also is it with regard to wool. A few figures here will demonstrate this lest doubt lingers in any mind. The extent of land afforested is 2,552,383 acres, and it has been officially laid down that five acres of average land devoted to deer forests are necessary for the maintenance of one sheep (Napier Commission Report, p. 86), therefore the deer forests are capable of maintaining 510,477 sheep. But under the universal system of management of hill stocks in the Highlands the number of sheep sent annually to market is only, at the most, one-third of the total stocks, which gives a possible annual output from the deer forests of 170,156 sheep, or reckoning the weight of each sheep at 60 lbs., a total quantity of 10,209,360 lbs. of mutton. Let this be now compared with the national meat bill, being 110·444 lbs. per head of the whole population

	Total Number.	Estimated Number consumed.	Weight per Head.	Weight consumed.

(37,880,764) at last census. Let this be contrasted with the supply of mutton which the grazings comprising the whole of the deer forests would be capable of yielding if restocked with sheep, and the proportion is found to be only ·002 lbs. per head of population.

Still more insignificant is the quantity and value of wool which might be derived from the deer forests when compared with the aggregate consumption of that commodity in the United Kingdom. In 1893 the importations of raw wools to this country amounted to the enormous quantity of . . 671,663,194 lbs.
Add to this home-grown wool from sheep of all ages except lambs, 98,800,280 ,,

Against this place the product of wool derivable from deer forests. They have a sheep keeping capacity of 510,477, deduct 150,000 under one-year old, from which no wool is obtainable at that age, and there remain 360,477, from which the annual return of wool would be 1,802,385 lbs., an almost imperceptible fraction of the total wool bill of the country.

It is hardly necessary to notice here several minor objections to deer forests which were occasionally heard till they were dispelled by the light shed upon this subject by the Report of the Royal Commission of 1883; but a few remarks may be made on the other side of the case, viz.:—the benefits which are now with little dissent allowed to spring from deer forests.

It admits of no dispute that to the owners of these lofty and rugged pastures the advantage of afforestment, especially in these times of great agricultural dullness, are great; but a little impartial consideration must also show that these advantages are widely diffused, and may not be withdrawn without material injury to large classes of people besides landlords and their immediate dependents. It would not be too much to say that in some localities abolition of deer forests would dislocate the whole economic arrangements, and be for these localities a transmutation from prosperity to poverty. The whole of the Highlands indeed are intimately dependant on gains from visitors. The acquisition of money from shootings and fishings especially is immense, and correspondingly great is its circulation among the trading and labouring classes, to whom it is needless to say this is of vital moment.

Through the great rents obtained for the lease of sporting subjects, especially deer forests, the parish rentals are very largely increased, and the pressure of taxation upon the poorer rate-payers is correspondingly alleviated. Over the whole of the sporting areas this is computed to be not less than 25 per cent., while in many Highland parishes the contribution of rates and taxes from sporting possessions is far higher, amounting in some instances to half of the whole rating. In not a few of these parishes rates are abnormally though unavoidably high, reaching to five, seven, and even ten shillings per £ of rental; and in such districts it is evident that a withdrawal of the sporting rental would be speedily followed by financial collapse. Further, these big rents enable the landlords to devote more of their means to improvement of their estates, and to the employment and comfort of their smaller tenantry and employees than they otherwise could possibly do.

But not through rents alone do the Highland people benefit from the sporting system in their midst. Every lessee of a deer forest, or of a grouse moor, or salmon fishing, must, in the mere maintenance of his establishment, be at considerable charges. In some cases these are upon a great scale. The annual expenditure of all kinds upon deer forests alone is there is reason to believe not less than £325,000. In some of these cases there is afforded steady employment and support to nearly the whole resident population; and a stoppage of this, from whatever cause, would entail the greatest injury and misery upon these persons, which it would be folly to expect could be recouped or relieved by the substitution of a colony of crofters for the former regime. Even where crofters managed to support themselves, after a fashion, it would not be said of them that they ever could be in circumstances to provide employments, or confer benefits, of any kind on the rest of the people in their vicinity. How great would be the contrast between the first state and the last in such a case. In 1883, facts were submitted to me with respect to 52 deer forests (being rather less than half of the whole number then existing), which showed that within a period of about forty years no less than £2,224,823 had been disbursed in connection with these properties, by owners and lessees, in rents, rates, improvements, and other ways, but excluding in every case purchase price. In the same ratio the expenditure applicable to the whole of the deer forests in 1883 would amount to £4,500,000. Ten years have since elapsed during which this expenditure has continuously gone on, so that these figures, great as they are, must be largely increased upon a computation brought up to the present date. The magnitude of this expenditure may excite surprise, but when it is considered that it includes not a few individual cases of outlay by lessees much interested in and attached to their districts, and possessed of ample means, to amounts ranging from £50,000 to £250,000, the matter may be more readily understood. It then may be better seen too, how much the districts and counties so favoured by this would suffer by its discontinuance.

An aspect of the proposal to appropriate the lower grazing grounds of these counties for crofting purposes which has not hitherto been much considered, now forcibly presents itself, viz.:—its bearing on the wood forestry of the Highlands. This is just the land most suitable for the rearing of trees. The arable land is not only very limited, but too valuable and indispensable for other purposes. It is moreover, speaking generally, less adapted to timber growing than sound hill ground at a moderate elevation. Upon the high and more exposed ground of these north-western counties successful timber cultivation is an impossibility. In this region the forces of nature have unalterably determined the timber line far below its limit in the drier and more protected districts upon the same lines of latitude, in the middle and eastern parts. He who would form a plantation of even the hardiest native trees in these wet and windy glens, or bleak hill slopes, must not expect success above a 600 or 700 feet level. If he ventures higher he will, while contemplating with pleasure satisfactory progress along the lower lines of his plantation, be doomed to note with disappointment and repentance the sickly aspect and dwarfish habit of the plants upon the higher parts. This, which must have been often observed by all who are interested in the growing timber of the North West Highlands, is a further and independent proof of its unkindly climate and unproductive soil. Still, there exists along the straths and shores a considerable extent of ground below a certain level which is not given up to the plough,—neither indeed can be without impossible expense,—very well adapted for the growth of timber. It is the only land in these parts fitted for this, with any prospect of commercial success. It is, however, precisely the land which it is now proposed to assign to crofter farming; and if it were segregated to this purpose, the rearing of plantations of trees in these north-western districts would be a lost, or at least impossible art. No longer would it be possible to produce those masses of trees which add so much to the embellishment of the landscape; which sensibly contribute to the shelter and moderation of climate in their neighbourhood; and which, above all, replace the constant abstractions of matured timber, and maintain a home supply of this indispensable commodity. The dedication of such land to crofter farming, under a form of tenure in all probability intended to stereotype it to that special purpose, would be a deathblow to the enterprise of the planter, and threaten with extinction the profession of the nurseryman in these parts. It is humbly suggested that the bearing of your inquiry upon the question of forestry is a matter of moment which should receive full consideration.

While the woodland area of Great Britain now extends to about 2,700,000 acres, there is reason to fear that the formation of new plantations does not keep pace with the consumption of the old. In the art and practice of forestry, Scotland occupies a creditable position. Her proportion of the total woodland area is 905,759 acres, or one-third, while of the planted area of Scotland one-third is in the Highland counties,—Inverness-shire alone having plantations extending to 168,738 acres, an area considerably greater than the surface under all other forms of crops in that county, and more than a fifth of the whole Scottish woodlands. 'It is noteworthy' says a Government Statistician 'that two-fifths of the surface planted in 'the last ten years is returned from Scotland alone, 'while practically half of the 41,000 acres of new 'plantations in that country are accounted for from 'the counties of Aberdeen, Inverness, and Ross.' What is the conclusion to be made from this? Unquestionably it is, that only in these Highland counties, or more extensively and more profitably in them than elsewhere, can the necessary reparations and expansions of planting be effected.

Planting on an extensive scale in the North-West Highlands has in latter days been strongly recommended on grounds distinct from the duty or utility of maintaining a national supply of home-grown timber. It would create a large and immediate channel, and afford a more or less permanent means of employment for the people in districts where work is never plentiful and seldom quite accessible. It would utilise presently unproductive ground; improve the face of the country; and ultimately greatly enhance the value of property. But, as has been said, there are great natural limitations to this view of the matter, and it may be assumed that men of business will take practical account of it, and will not venture to sow where they cannot reap. One point, at any rate, is sufficiently clear. The land now under review, as a possible refuge for crofters, is precisely the land, and the only land, which in these districts is fit for successful forestry. It cannot be dedicated to both purposes.

Such are, I think, the facts of the problem which has been given to you to investigate, and such, in my opinion, would be the inevitable effects of withdrawing from their present form of use, and segregating to the use of crofters, the arable and low-lying pasture lands within the area under consideration. I have shown at the outset that the available quantity of such land is insufficient for the purpose in view. Reasons deduced from the forbidding character of the climate, and from formidable economic and financial impediments have been stated to show that successful establishment of crofters upon these lands is impossible; and some actual and recent examples of failure of such endeavours have been given. It has been urged that even were such a policy possible, it could only be effected at the sacrifice of interests of greater importance than the concerns of the crofters; and that it would indeed operate to the serious prejudice of the common welfare of the Highlands. The fact that there has been no real or general demand by the crofter class for migration has been pointed out; and that, on the other hand, the proposed movement would be hurtful and obnoxious to the existing inhabitants of the proposed new crofting areas, and would be strenuously objected to by them.

It is by no means my wish to picture on too sombre a canvas the effects which, I believe, would follow adoption in practice of the proposals submitted to this Royal Commission. I trust I am keenly enough sensible of the hard and hopeless lot of many of the crofter class in their present position, and of the desirableness of helping them to improve their condition; but if I am asked whether upon a calm and serious review of the circumstances surrounding this problem, an extensive scheme of local migration of crofters and cottars could be undertaken with reasonable prospects of success, I must, without hesitation, say, it is not permanently possible. Even were its enduring possibility demonstrable, or left an open question, what, under such impediments as have been here explained, could be said of its desirability? How could the disadvantages be outweighed or counterbalanced by the advantages of the scheme?

On the one hand there would be something approaching paralysis of the great concern of sheep farming. There would be extinction of the extensive and increasingly valuable benefits derived from shootings and fishings, which are at present the only prosperous possession within the Highlands. In the wake of these results a general stoppage of every description of land improvement would necessarily ensue; and it needs no proof that by a diminished or suppressed application of capital to the land, the channels of labour must be greatly restricted. With curtailment of the fields of labour, and of the volume of trade, to a serious extent, there would arise an increase of pauperism and an enhancement of rates and taxes. In brief, an economic revolution such magnitude and far reaching influence would be set up as would plunge the material concerns of the Highlands backwards and downwards to the low and meagre level of a century and a half ago, prior to the discovery and introduction of those great interests which awoke the Highlands to that advancement and prosperity in every line of life and business which it has so long enjoyed.

On the other hand, what would the Highlands gain from a feasible system of local migration of crofters and cottars? At the best a place of living for a few thousand families under surroundings and limitations which must for ever preclude them from sharing in many of the comforts far less the pleasures of their more fortunate compatriots. The provision of a home with a few acres, which, unless it were a mere repetition of the wretchedness, squalor, and insanitation of existing crofterdom,—which no local authority would now permit,—must be so crushed by financial obligations as to lead before long to insolvency. It is a scheme which would give impetus and importunity to the baleful cry of state help versus self-help, and would lend encouragement and strength to visions, already common, of reaping without sowing,—of consuming without producing, of enjoyment without exertion. Its victims, for so they would in the end be, would be tied to a baneful cast-iron system of land occupation, whence freedom of contract had not only been eliminated, but where a vexatious and oppressive code of conditions had been imposed; wherein protection pure and simple was sought to be stereotyped, and free trade found little recognition. It seems impossible that intelligent Highland men and women should desire the establishment, or would long endure the continuance of a system of living so hard, bare, and incapable of expansion into higher and better things. Their common sense, their education, their ambition, and even their religion must ultimately revolt against it, and flow forward into channels affording possibilities of a sweeter, happier, and even longer earthly existence.

Impregnated with the seeds of agricultural failure, and charged with elements of financial collapse, ready to burst forth on the first reverse, the life of such an undertaking would not be a prolonged one. Sooner or later the dissolution of such a system would be inevitable, but it might be late enough to have meantime involved in disastrous overthrow all those interests which this hurtful and hopeless crofter system had supplanted, and which probably, nay certainly, could never be restored in their former volume and value.

Inverness. George Malcolm.

Divergence from these views will probably be offered to your consideration, as well as, I should hope, full approval and ample confirmation of them. But at the very least, upon such a serious difference of opinion regarding a question which all will admit touches the most vital interests of the Highlands, there is the strongest call for caution, and inquiry of the most searching kind, before venturing on what might prove to put it in the least disputable way, the most disastrous and irretraceable act of policy ever applied to this region. It seems natural, therefore, to submit to your consideration, in the event of your not being thoroughly satisfied, upon the conclusion of your inquiry, of the impracticability of local migration of crofters and cottars, upon a profitable basis, the suggestion of an experimental trial of the scheme. It is believed that no very formidable obstacle to this would be met with if Her Majesty's Government were prepared to embark in it. For this purpose the most obvious and hopeful course would be the acquisition by purchase of one or more of the Hebridean Isles, or a tract of the Western Seaboard adjacent to a congested district, for partition among crofters or cottars in relief of the congestion. The experiment would, of course, be elaborated and wrought out under conditions, the wisest and fairest that could be devised. Expropriation of the landlord on reasonable terms. Crofts suitable in extent, and adequately equipped with buildings, fences, &c. Due provision of necessary roads, schools, and other accessories. Effective rules of management, agricultural, and financial. Sufficient time secured for thoroughly testing the adventure; and so on. No one would probably offer serious objection to an experiment upon these lines; and though none of the larger islands is of sufficient extent to furnish sizeable crofts for all its surplus or landless population, there would at least be scope in this way for a certain measure of present relief. If, simultaneous with this, additional voluntary and probably more effective means of reduction of the overcrowded and poverty stricken populations of the north-west were devised and kept operative, some permanent success might be hoped from the experiment. Even if it resulted in failure, being of restricted application it would, at worst, be failure under financial limitations, and it would have served a not altogether bad or useless purpose. A light and lesson would have been obtained, guiding the hands in power and saving the rest of these counties from becoming involved in a gigantic, chimerical, costly, and disastrous adventure.

While the primary object of these pages is to record a clear and sincere conviction,—founded upon a continuous and consistent train of facts, and the deduction of a lengthened personal experience,—adverse to the propositions submitted to your consideration, I may be permitted, as bearing intimately upon the matters involved, to indicate, at no great length, certain means by which, in my opinion, the overcrowding and other ills pressing upon some sections of the crofter population may be redressed, and a healthy and hopeful change may be initiated.

In considering remedial measures it is natural to turn first to the districts concerned, and see what native helps are possible to the solution of this problem of the social and material advancement of the Highland crofters. The catalogue of actual or possible industrial pursuits in the North and West Highlands is a short and meagre one. Destitute of minerals, and almost equally devoid of textile industries, there are really no staple employments but such as are connected with the landed and fishing interests. The landed interest, with which is associated the concerns of sport, has already been discussed, but some mention must here be made of the fishing in these western waters.

By some it is urged that the settlement of the Highland difficulties is largely dependent upon improved and steady cultivation of the valuable fisheries which undoubtedly exist around and off the west coast of Scotland. It is true that in several respects fishing in the open sea, especially where this includes culture as well as capture of the produce of the ocean, has important advantages over agriculture. The fisherman owns no lord of the soil; is hampered by no private rights, saving the trifling exceptions applicable to the three mile limit. He pays no rent, and is not amenable to rates or taxes, yet how precarious, fitful, and generally inconsiderable are the results of fishing along the Western Seaboard. Be the reasons what they may, it hardly needs re-statement here that, in comparison with the extent and success of the fishing industry on the east coast of Scotland, fishing on the west coast is of trifling importance. The herring fishing will serve as an illustration of this. While in 1891 the quantity of herrings captured on the east coast was 858,646 barrels, on the west coast in the same year (a favourable one for herring on the west coast), it was only 267,426 barrels. In 1892 the herrings caught on the east coast were 795,277 barrels, and on the west coast 249,042 barrels. While the average take of herrings on the east coast from 1881 to 1890 was 1,111,744 barrels, the average take on the west coast during the same period was only 225,276 barrels. In 1892 the east coast accounted for 79 per cent. of the quantity, and 81 per cent. of the value, of fish of all kinds landed on the shores of Scotland. In 1892 the amount invested in the fishing industry on the east coast was £1,659,000 while on the west coast it was only £209,000.

The apathy, ill-luck, want of skill, or whatever it may be called, of the west coast fisherman is accentuated by the history of the provision made under the 32nd Section of the Crofters Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1886, by which financial assistance is extended to fishermen for procuring and maintaining efficient boats and tackle. In so far as this has been availed of, which has only been to the extent of 246 separate transactions, covering a total amount lent of £30,111, 16s. 7d., at a low rate of interest and repayment of capital,—the scheme has proved a disastrous blunder and failure for all concerned. At the end of 1891 (no loans have since been granted) fully 50 per cent. of the instalments, including interests, of repayment of these advances was in arrear. Not only were there these arrears, but, as at 31st December 1891, the Fishery Board for Scotland state, that they included 'thirty-nine cases of arrears of loans 'which were in such a position that the Board con-'sidered the balances due as irrecoverable. Every 'endeavour has been made both by taking legal 'proceedings and otherwise to reduce the arrears, 'but with very poor results. In many cases the 'Board have had to pay heavy legal and other expenses 'not only in carrying out prosecutions, but in taking 'possession of the borrowers' boats (some of which 'were abandoned and left uncared for) in order to 'avoid almost a total loss.'

In the unfortunate results of this well-meant governmental experiment one may reasonably read a warning of the probable fate of a similar policy if applied to crofts. Analogy in this case, however, should not be carried too far, for it is right to say, that the industry of fishing along the west coast is greatly hampered by the conditions under which it is at present pursued. The lack, in some parts the utter want, of facilities for conveying the takes of fish to a rapid and ready market is a complete bar to steady success. Nor does this apply to off-shore fishing only. With regard to off-shore fishing, when a good take of fish has been secured, it may be after the toil and risk of launching into a stormy sea, the loss and disappointment from failure of market is of course very bitter But it likewise not seldom applies when rich and great shoals of herrings come crowding into the sea, lochs, and creeks, almost to the doors of the fishermen's cottages. Under such circumstances the fish are either not caught at all, or when taken, are sold, unpreventably, at very unremunerative prices. Herein probably lies, it is right to say, some explanation of the seeming indolence, and apparently culpable neglect of opportunities of catching fish, which the west coast men are often accused of. They, in reality, lack the necessary spur to their industry which the certainty of a steady, fair, and always accessible market for the produce of their labour supplies.

In this connection the most pressing need is further railway communications directly to the north west coast, and, if possible, throughout the larger islands. More harbours, and a free extension of postal and telegraphic accommodation, are also no doubt, necessary; but the numerous sheltered arms of the sea to some extent serve as good substitutes for artificial harbours, and lessen the necessity for a great expenditure under this head; and it must be admitted that much has been done in recent years, and much more will probably be done at an early date, to provide adequately for the postal and telegraphic necessities of these parts. But neither telegraphs nor harbours will avail if rapid and effective means of land transport do not exist. Neither of the two railways which touch the north western coast of Scotland at present is of great use for the conveyance of fish in respect to considerable stretches of the fishing grounds. It is necessarily an exceedingly tedious and inconvenient route from the west coast by Dingwall and Inverness to the southern markets, and, therefore, the Highland railway does not meet the requirements of the more southerly fishing quarters. On the other hand, the railway which proceeds from Oban lies much too far south for the wants of the more northerly fishings. What is evidently needed for full development of the fishings of the North Western Highlands, is, at least two additional and independent lines of railway, carried to this coast,—one between the existing railways, and the other farther north. Not till these are made will the latent value of these fisheries be fully utilised for the special benefit of the crofter fisher class, and the good of the public at large. There is good reason to suppose that assistance by Government Guarantee of a small rate of interest on the capital invested, or by a moderate contribution towards the construction charges of these railways, is all that is required to effect this most urgent public improvement. (Since the foregoing was written, Parliamentary sanction has been obtained for a railway to Mallaig on the west coast of Inverness-shire, which, when made, cannot fail to be of much benefit to fishermen and others in these parts). The great benefits which these railways would provide would not be confined to the fishings. While the benefits of harbours are practically restricted to sea-faring interests, those of railways are of universal application, and invariably foster and advance every industry. Wherever they have been established, they have proved a most powerful agent in the extirpation of poverty, idleness, and languishing trade; and it may be confidently predicted that not till these Highlands are adequately penetrated and tapped by this beneficent agency, will the oft-recurring difficulties of this division of the country be permanently allayed.

If within the region under review the supply of profitable employments for the whole able-bodied population is insufficient, and cannot be made sufficient under existing circumstances, it is a self-evident conclusion that the pressure of this superabundant and largely non-self-supporting population, with all its attendant ills, cannot be permanently relieved by a mere redistribution of this population within the same area. It follows with equal clearness that the only effectual and enduring remedy for such a condition of things lies in a partial dispersal of these over-populated communities. As to this dilution of congestion, and as to its urgency, all are agreed, but all are not at one as to the best method of doing it.

Seeing that the whole population of the North-West Highlands cannot be decently maintained through employments indigenous to these parts, there are but two other ways of doing so, viz.:—migration to other centres of industry, and emigration. The wealth, high station, and success in all the conditions of life, which many Highlanders have achieved when emancipated from the forbidding conditions of existence, which in their native parishes were alone possible, should, one would suppose, be a strong inducement to their brethern to endeavour to follow their example in larger numbers. The operation of immoveable economic law, and the natural growth of higher desires in life, quickened by the effects of the excellent system of education now in operation all over the country, will no doubt in due time awaken Highlanders, especially the younger men and women, to the pursuit of this better way. This beneficent movement of population is observed in silent operation in all other parts of the country, and the wonder is that it has been hitherto less seen and acted upon in these north-western districts than elsewhere. Difference of language, and racial peculiarities may be largely accountable for this. Certain it is that to them are attributable much of the idleness, poverty, and general backwardness which have so long rested upon this northern population, and not till these distinctions are rooted out, and the Highland people are assimilated in language, habits, education, occupations, and communications with the busy industrial populations in other parts of the Empire, will this Highland question, with its irritating sores, ever be completely healed.

It should not be forgotten that the crofter system, the system of small tenancies, is not new in the economic and social history of our country; nor has it been always confined to the Highlands. At one time general over the whole of the face of Scotland apparently, it has gradually, at various dates, given place to consolidation of holdings everywhere but in the Highlands. There it has lingered down to the present time. Down to the union of the English and Scottish Crowns, the agricultural as well as the social and political circumstances of the Lowlands, with the exception of a belt along the Eastern Seaboard, were identical with those of the Highlands. The accessibility of this strip along the eastern coast to the visits and influence of both the English and French peoples, as well as its own superior soil and resources, appear to have greatly favoured it, and to have withdrawn it from much of the strife and bloodshed, rapine and famine, which down to 1603, or thereby, were constant scenes in all other parts of Scotland, south as well as north. But, as has been noticed by various writers, while there was this unquestionable similarity between north and south,—between the Celts of the Highlands and the Anglo-Normans of the Lowlands and Borders; while both races were identical in their more peaceful habits and pursuits as well as in their marauding and destructive propensities down to about the date mentioned, their later history, and their present condition, present a sharp and surprising contrast. How is this explained? It lies in this, that, whereas in the south the statutes and executive of the Crown, supported by the augmented power of the Union, were successfully applied in suppressing the plundering forays and frays, and all the numerous forms of lawlessness of those times, the same effect was not produced in the north. In the northern parts of the country, now called the Highlands, the reforming and repressive Acts of Government, though felt and submitted to, to the extent that they closed the age of hostilities between the Crown and powerful chiefs claiming practical independence, failed, for at least a century and a half later, to put a period to the raiding and ravaging of clan upon clan or sept upon sept. While in the south this triumph of authority led immediately to a numerous drafting of the clansmen of these parts from their evil surroundings and pernicious occupations to the seats of peaceful and productive industry, in the Highlands there was no contemporaneous movement of this kind. While in the south, coeval with these changes, there occurred a great extension of agriculture, especially of sheep farming, in the Highlands agriculture made little way, and sheep farming by system found no footing till at least a century later. In a word, while migration with all its benefits, was promptly on the beginning of the reign of order and law taken advantage of by the south, it has, down to the present day, been sparely resorted to in the north and west, though it must be evident that, so far as it has been adopted, it has generally been attended with the happiest results. All this may be clearly traced in the social and material welfare of the people of these respective districts,—now so dissimilar, though differing so little in the beginning of the seventeenth century. In the one case development of population has not risen above the level of requirements,—free and unfettered bargaining rules in the daily affairs of men, excitements to lawlessness or solicitations to evil courses in any shape, are never heard,—the voice of grumbling is still, and peace and plenty fill the land. In the other case a grossly superabundant and too often idle population is found, which has never been able to rise above a squalid life of privation, and struggle for mere existence, and where of late outbreaks of angry discontent, and even resorts to violence, have not been unknown; where artificial remedies have been tried, which have brought no permanent relief, for, being economically unsound, they were foredoomed to failure.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

The loitering march of prosperity of the Celtic Highlands, in so far as it is due to dissimilarity of race or duality of language, is a condition which is gradually, and at an increasing pace, wearing itself out. But the infertility of the northern soil and the inhospitality of its climate, have also been important factors in the lagging condition of Highland crofters. These are, unfortunately, irremoveable barriers to an ideal form of agriculture in these parts,—but if they are irremoveable they may be moved from; and not till a large portion of the population in these north-west districts, now pressing upon the resources of the land far more than the land can bear, betake themselves to other localities and pursuits, may they hope for prosperity equal to that of their fellow countrymen.

No impartial or complete consideration, however, of the problem wrapped in the condition of the crofter population, and of the most practicable and effective means of extrication from its difficulties, is possible without taking into account that which has been most prominently recommended through past investigation and experience, as well as by the highest and most fully instructed testimony contemporaneous with the present inquiry, namely voluntary emigration. Upon that point, as a first and indispensable necessity of immediate alleviation, as well as of permanent improvement, of the state of the people in question, there is a consensus of evidence and opinion, as submitted to every successive official body which has tracked the case, which appears to be quite conclusive. It was likewise strongly insisted upon by the writers of the old Statistical Accounts of the Northern Parishes in the last decade of the last century, men who had the very foremost opportunities of appreciating the conditions and wants of the country at that period. Earlier as well as later writers have likewise, with scarcely an exception, adopted the same view, that emigration must form a leading and essential part of any good scheme for the permanent betterment of this population.

It would be inconvenient to encumber these pages with many examples of the numberless testimonies in favour of emigration which have been referred to, but two or three short quotations from the Reports following Governmental inquiries may be made. In '1841, the Select Committee appointed to inquire into 'the condition of the population of the Highlands 'and Islands of Scotland, and into the practicability 'of affording the people relief by means of emigra-'tion,' after stating that 'the famine and destitution 'in the years 1836 and 1837 were so extensive that 'many thousands would have died of starvation had 'it not been for the assistance which they received 'from the Government and the public' called 'the 'serious attention of the House to the necessity of 'considering some efficient remedies to alleviate the 'existing evils amongst which that which appears 'from the evidence to be of primary importance 'is a well-arranged system of emigration.' Sir John Macneill in his well-known and very able Report of 1851 on the distressed condition of the Western Highlands and Islands arising from the failure of potato culture in 1846–47, and the collapse of kelp manufacture a few years earlier, very emphatically insisted upon emigration as a first necessity of lasting alleviation of this distress, and put upon record that 'in the whole course of his 'inquiry not one individual who was questioned on 'the subject, save one, expressed a belief that the 'population of those districts could be extricated from 'their present difficulties without the aid of emigra-'tion.' Following upon this Report and the alarming state of the population which it disclosed, coupled with the emphasis and urgency with which the resort to emigration was recommended an 'Act to facilitate 'emigration from certain distressed districts of Scot-land,' was passed in 1851, which, however, obtained little favour owing to its cumbrous and onerous provisions.

Coming to a more recent date, the facts and reasons by which state-aided voluntary emigration has been uniformly and strongly recommended by the several Royal Commissions and Parliamentary Committees which were appointed to deal with the acute reap-pearance of the old forms of Highland distress, and manifestations of discontent during the past ten years or thereby are fresh in the recollection of all persons interested. The better known and most im-portant of these, viz. :—the Royal Commission of 1883–84, presided over by Lord Napier, and otherwise com-posed entirely of Highland gentlemen intimately con-versant with Highland affairs, and admirably qualified to appreciate and advise upon the questions submitted to them, insisted upon emigration, 'as an indispensable 'remedy for the condition of some parts of the High-'lands and Islands' (Report, p. 108). The report of Her Majesty's Secretary for Scotland on the condition of the cottar population in the Lews, a sectional inquiry, arising from a recurrence of poverty there in an accen-tuated degree, intrusted to the resident Sheriff of that island and Mr Macneill, Secretary of the Board of Super-vision, gives expression to the same views. Similar testimony is continued and enforced in the 'Report 'of the Commission (1890) (also appointed by the 'Secretary for Scotland) to inquire into certain 'matters affecting the interests of the population of 'the Western Highlands and Islands of Scotland,' where the Commissioners say 'that every means 'should be taken to explain the advantages of emi-'gration, and that facilities should be afforded by 'Government to enable those who are willing to move 'to commence life elsewhere; and we desire to place 'on record our conviction that until some measure 'has been taken in this direction no material improve-'ment in the condition of the population can be 'effected.' Lastly, the very important report of the Select Committee on Colonisation in 1891 may be re-ferred to as presenting further emphatic corroboration of the views of their official predecessors on emigration. This large and very able Committee of twenty-one members of the House of Commons, of all shades of politics, and representing many varying interests in life and business, were ordered 'to inquire into 'various schemes which have been proposed to her 'Majesty's Government to facilitate emigration from 'the congested districts of the United Kingdom to the 'British Colonies or elsewhere; to examine into the 'results of any schemes which have received practical 'trial in recent years, and to report generally whether, 'in their opinion, it is desirable that further facilities 'should be given to promote emigration; and if so, 'upon the means and the conditions under which such 'emigration can best be carried out, and the quarters 'to which it can most advantageously be directed.' This committee, after hearing voluminous evidence, and giving prolonged consideration to the subject referred to them; and after indicating that in their view 'Migration' would not offer a suitable or adequate remedy, and after dealing with various suggestions for the temporary or partial relief of destitution in Lewis 'and other spots severely though less terribly con-'gested,' thus spoke of emigration. 'It cannot be 'doubted that there are districts in which no remedial 'measures can be adequate or permanently beneficial 'which do not include some for the reduction of the 'redundant population within manageable limits. In 'so saying, your committee can lay claim to no new 'discovery. From 1836 down to the present time 'competent authorities have from time to time 'declared that the population of these districts cannot 'be extricated from their difficulties without the aid 'of emigration, and each successive report has demon-'strated that the evil and the necessity have contin-'uously increased.'

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

These conclusions, so clear, uniform and emphatic, derived from the fullest and most perfect sources that could be resorted to, and framed with all the care and sifted accuracy of Governmental investigations, cannot certainly be impugned upon any ground of imperfection of inquiry. Nor are the impartiality and freedom from prejudice of this committee less undoubted than their capableness and assiduity.

These official pronouncements, unanimous and decided as they are, do not stand alone in their prefer-ence of emigration as the most hopeful remedy for the congestion and distress in the Highlands. An equally solid, and practically unanimous, body of opinion coming from clergymen, land agents, the larger tenants, and other persons residing among these people, and consequently having the best means of studying this subject, closely agrees with these oft-repeated official findings. Many even of the crofter class them-selves have also, there is good reason for believing, recognised the necessity of a free resort to voluntary emigration for the relief of their home life, and the brightening of the time to come. They only await light and leading to this desirable change.

Surely then, recommendations, official as well as private, reiterated with so much unhesitating emphasis and unanimity, might justly be taken as conclusive. It is nevertheless true, that in these Highland districts, where relief from the congestion and impoverishment of the population have been most clamantly required, scant readiness has been shown in later years to resort to emigration. The reasons assigned for this are various, but two only, which probably embrace all others, need here be noticed, viz. :—(1) imperfection of the schemes of emigration hitherto submitted to the Highland people, and (2) interested misrepresentation of the purposes and results of emigration.

No plan of voluntary state-aided emigration, fittingly adapted to the peculiar circumstances of the Scottish crofters, has yet been advanced. Schemes furthered by Government no less than those emanating from private enterprise or philanthrophy, have been equally marked by failure. Of controversy respecting the personality of the ideal Highland emigrant; whether he should be simply emigrated, or both emigrated and colonised, and of similar barren discussion, there has, indeed, been more than enough; but no scheme of public or private origin conceived with adequate regard to the home condition as well as the over country necessities of the Highland peasantry, has yet been devised. The powers conferred on County Councils under the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, of aiding in emigration or colonisation, appear to have been still born. So far as known these powers have not been exercised in a single case. An exception to the general failure should perhaps be made of the recent Convention between the British Government and the Government of British Columbia, under which a sum of £150,000 has been appropriated for emigra-tion to and colonisation in the latter country, though even this enterprise appears to stand in need of some elaboration and amendment in order to bring it into perfect adaptability to the ends in view. When that has been done, however, there seems good reason to expect that at least one hopeful field will have been opened for the redundancy of the crofter class, where their energies may have a liberal reward.

The advantages of emigration to the overflowing and struggling crofter population of the Highlands are not even in the present day, universally admitted. In some cases the ground of opposition is no more than an unreasonable sentiment of attachment to the land of birth; the people cannot brace themselves to the point of breaking with the old, though it be deeply marked with failure, and girding their energies to the new, so fruitful of better possibilities to them. But more frequently those advantages are hotly disputed by persons whose motives are grounded on self-seeking in politics or trade. By specious detraction of the honest purpose and prospects of emigration, or by dangling before the people misleading views of their situation at home, leading representatives of the crofters have frequently been seduced from the truest interests of their class; and as Highlanders, of whom the crofter body is composed, are as gregarious in thought as they are in material and domestic concerns, counsels inimical to emigration have thus too often prevailed. But notwithstanding all this prejudice against emigration, and the interested efforts to gainsay its success where it has already been fairly tried, emigrants from the Highlands to Canada and elsewhere are rapidly making satisfactory way in their new homes and possessions. When this fact has been sufficiently absorbed and rooted in the knowledge of the Highland people, the same gregarious sentiment which has operated against a free resort to emigration, will, it may be confidently expected, tell rapidly in favour of it. Even now the mythical and untrue, which have been so long, with cruel and culpable persistency, instilled into their minds respecting this matter, are being dispelled by the growth of education and the widening of intelligence among the young. Agitators, professional politicians, and vote hunters, so long the agents in disseminating much unwise and unfaithful doctrine and advice among this people, are gradually being discredited. Driven from pillar to post, they are now at their last line of defence,—an impossible scheme of local migration. The close of a long period of misrepresentation and deception, and the dawn of a more reasonable appreciation of the facts and true position of this social problem, seem at hand.

Inverness. George Malcolm.

So it has always been and will be, that in the long run the homely attributes of industry, self-reliance, sobriety, and prudence assert their sway and determine the individual lot. These are the most effectual counteractives of such ills as our crofter and cottar population are heir to, and offer the most promising guarantee of a better day to come. They are the only sure and safe avenues to comfort, and independence void of spurious elements. Let then this hereditary bondage to a life doomed and demonstrated by the unalterable powers of nature to failure, be abandoned, and let the people seek the more excellent way, as truly they must in varying degrees, in a fuller and more skilful traffic with the riches of the seas which wash their shores; in a wider adoption of more favoured portions of the British Islands for their lines of life, and in a larger resort to those fields of promise in further lands, where kin and clan have already in innumerable cases established themselves amid many blessings.

It is the sincerest wish of the writer of these notes, who throughout a long intercourse with the crofter class has received from them many signs of friendship and respect, and towards whom he entertains every mutual kindly regard, that, by whatever means it may be accomplished, their lives and fortunes may be greatly bettered and brightened in the not distant future.—Respectfully submitted by,

(Signed) George Malcolm.

If there were no Deer Forests in Kilmallie Parish rates would be increased 40 per cent.

(Signed) GEORGE MALCOLM.

August 31, 1894.

Inverness. George Malcolm.

52,552. Mr Sutherland.—Whose statement is that?—It is my own statement entirely.

52,553. For whom?—For myself.

52,554. It is not a statement made by you in any representative capacity whatever, but represents only your own views?—It is generally said that I represent the landlords.

52,555. And therefore I wish to ascertain whether that is their representation, or your own individual representation?—It is my own.

52,556. Are we to take you as presenting this to us as being the landlords' views and sentiments and opinions upon the questions dealt with?—There has been no special appointment of myself to make this statement as representing the Highland landlords or as representing the Highland Property Association.

52,557. You are here representing yourself in that statement?—Yes, I am here as professing to know something about the subject.

52,558. As an individual?—Yes; I have been expected by these landlords and by the members of that Association to appear and make a statement, but it is proper to say that I have not been formally appointed to do so.

52,559. So then that is your own individual statement?—Yes.

52,560. It must be either yours or theirs?—Well, I put it forward as my statement; it is not headed as coming from the landlords at all.

52,561. It is your own statement, Mr Malcolm, for yourself?—Yes.

52,562. Mr Munro.—You are the Secretary of the Landlords Property Defence Association, I understand?—Yes.

52,563. And do you make this statement in the capacity of Secretary of that Association?—I have not signed it as the Secretary of that Association, but it may be considered so.

[Adjourned.]

SIXTY-FIRST SITTING.

Inverness.

INVERNESS, September 1, 1894.

Present:—

David Brand, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
Michael Hugh Shaw Stewart, Esq., M.P.
Angus Sutherland, Esq., M.P.
Rev. Malcolm Maccallum.
John Macleod, Esq.
Henry Munro, Esq.
William Mackenzie, Esq., Secretary.

George Malcolm.

George Malcolm, Invergarry—Examination resumed.

Before my examination is proceeded with, my lord, I would like to make a short explanation as to my precise position here with reference to a conversation which took place when we were all on our feet and about to leave last night. Mr Sutherland asked me whose paper that was; I said it was mine. He then, I think, asked me if the paper represented the opinions of the landlords of the Highlands; I stated that I had no authority to say that it represented the views of all the landlords of the Highlands, whereupon a question was put to me by Mr Munro which I could not have properly heard, for it appears he asked me if it represented the views of the Highland Property Association, and it seems that I gave a doubtful answer, or gave a negative answer to the question, whereas I wish it to be understood that I am here to represent the Highland Property Association.

Inverness. George Malcolm.

52,563A. The Chairman.—Then, your paper is one which we may take as setting forth the views of the Association which you represent?—Yes.

52,563B. And the views there stated by you are their own views?—Yes, I take the responsibility of that.

52,563C. Mr Sutherland.—May I ask you about the membership of the Association,—has it a large membership?—There are about 90 members.

52,563D. May these 90 members be taken to represent the majority of the landowners in the Highlands of Scotland?—Oh, no; I don't think so.

52,564. Do they include the greater number of the large landowners in the Highlands?—Yes, a considerable number of the members are amongst the largest landholders in the Highlands.

52,565. The report of the meeting at Inverness which was referred to yesterday is prefaced by a list of gentlemen who were present, or who apologised for absence?—Yes.

52,566. Are all the names mentioned there to be found in the roll of membership of the Association?—I do not remember the particular names in the report.

52,567. Was it a meeting of the Association?—It was a meeting called by the Association.

52,568. But it does not follow that every gentleman mentioned there is a member of the Association?—Certainly not.

52,569. What are the objects of the Association?—The objects of the Association, briefly stated, are to defend the interests of the persons who compose the Association.

52,570. And by what means?—By defending their properties or interests when they are attacked.

52,571. That is, when they are attacked openly, I presume?—Yes; we can only know it when it is done openly.

52,572. You do not mean, of course, that in the case of its being physically attacked they would physically resist?—Oh, no; it defends the rights of property.

52,573. By constitutional means, of course?—To be sure.

52,574. By open constitutional means?—Certainly.

52,575. What methods does it generally pursue to that end?—We sometimes make communications to the press; we endeavour to interest members of Parliament in our view of matters when the properties or interests of members of the Association are, we think, being unduly attacked in Parliament.

52,576. And do you hold public meetings?—No.

52,577. Do you take any action at the time of Parliamentary or local elections?—No, we never interfere with elections.

52,578. Are the objects and the Articles of Association in print?—No.

52,579. Do you hold regular stated meetings?—There are meetings of the Council of the Association from time to time as they are required.

52,580. And the meeting of which we see the report was not, you say, a meeting of the Association but a meeting convened under its auspices?—Exactly.

52,581. Can you refer me to any other meeting that was a public or a semi-public meeting like this one, which has been held under its auspices?—There was a former meeting of landlords.

52,582. In 1885?—In 1885; but I think the Association rather grew out of than preceded that meeting.

52,583. But to all intents and purposes, with the single exception of these meetings, the society may be said to be a secret society?—It is a private society, of course; but we, from time to time, address communications to all the landlords in the Highlands as well as to our own members; and to the members of the Association a report drawn up by myself is sent every year.

52,584. Has the constitution been committed to writing?—No. When the Association was formed, a circular was sent to the members setting forth the objects of, and how the Association should be constituted; but there was no drawing up of a formal constitution, or rules of membership, or procedure, or anything of that sort.

52,585. You cannot then hand in a copy of its constitution?—No; nothing of the kind exists.

52,586. You are the Secretary of the Association?—Yes.

52,588. Who is the President?—The Duke of Sutherland.*

52,589. And what other office-bearers have you?—There are six or seven members of Council, the President and Vice-President, and myself as Secretary; these are all.

52,590. Do you refer to the late Duke of Sutherland, or the present Duke?—The late Duke of Sutherland was President, and the present Duke of Sutherland accepted office as his successor.

52,591. It was offered to him, and he accepted it?—Yes.

52,592. Then, the statement which you read to us yesterday is a statement on behalf of that society?—Yes. It, of course, sets forth my own individual views as well.

52,593. Doubtless; it would have been remitted to you to write it, and the Association accepted the responsibility of the views which you, as their Secretary, have embodied in that report?—Quite so.

52,594. Now, as to your own qualifications for writing such a report, Mr Malcolm; you stated, I think, that you have been for a long period of years in the Highlands?—I have been for 34 or 35 years engaged in the management of land in the Highlands; I have been 30 years at Invergarry, where I am now.

52,595. May I ask you how old you were when you first came to the Highlands?—I am 56 years of age now, so that I must have been 22 at that time.

52,596. And before that, what part of the country had you had experience of? Where were you brought up?—I was brought up in Edinburgh, and came directly from a Chartered Accountant's office to the north.

52,597. I do not want you to go into particulars, only that you are not a native of the Highlands. You express very freely opinions regarding the history of the Highlands, the development of industries, and the social conditions that now exist. You do not deny that, of course?—Oh, no.

52,598. Had you ever any experience as a crofter?—Not personally as a crofter.

52,599. Have you ever been a farmer?—Yes, I have been a farmer, in the capacity of having to farm land for the estate.

52,600. While you were factor?—Yes.

52,601. Have you ever been a gamekeeper?—No. But I have had a good deal of intercourse with gamekeepers.

52,602. As a factor?—Yes.

52,603. Have you ever been a shepherd?—No; but there again, I know all about shepherding, from the personal experience of managing a sheep farm.

52,604. As a factor?—Yes.

52,605. Have you ever been a deer forester?—I have the same answer to give to that.

52,606. You are only a deer forester as a factor. You had to do with deer forests principally, I presume, in the way of forming them?—Well, there are two or three cases of deer forests that have certainly gone through my hands, but I have had far more to do with them in a general way.

52,607. Forming them?—No; I have formed no deer forests, as far as I recollect, outside our own estates.

52,608. And, of course, you always received the rents for them,—that was part of your duty?—Yes, on our own estates.

* Mr Malcolm has since written explaining that, in stating the Duke of Sutherland is the President, he made a mistake,—the President being the Duke of Atholl.

52,609. That, then, is your experience in regard to these matters. You have frequently given evidence on this subject, have you not?—On Highland matters generally; I have done so twice or thrice, I think, publicly.

52,610. That would, of course, fall to your position as Secretary of the Association?—Only once since the Association was formed, I think.

52,611. And I have no doubt that is part of the Association's propaganda?—When they think it necessary that I, as representing them, should give evidence before any body or committee having to do with their affairs, they do expect me, I suppose, to do so; on these occasions I receive instructions.

52,612. So that you may be not unfairly described as an expert witness?—Well, I should not like to call myself an expert, but I profess to know something of these subjects.

52,613. The fact that you were called upon by these bodies you have referred to justifies you, I suppose, in being called an expert witness?—They might call me so; I should not like to describe myself as an expert.

52,614. But you will admit that the subject could not have been brought before us from your point of view in a more complete form than that in which you have brought it?—I have, of course, endeavoured to bring it before you very completely,—I am afraid at greater length than any of us would have liked yesterday, but I could not avoid that.

52,615. From the fulness of your knowledge of the subject from your point of view, you could not do less?—No.

52,616. Do you then in accordance with your modesty admit that you are the very best witness the landlords could have brought forward from their point of view?—It is not for me to say that.

52,617. Of course, but it would not be unfair for me to say so of you?—Well, I could not, of course, say that of myself, but if anybody else says it, I cannot object.

52,618. I wish to give you credit for what I believe you possess,—the best qualifications possible to advance this subject in the interests of those whom you represent?—I do not dispute it, if you say so.

52,619. You gave us a resumé of the history of the Highlands?—Yes, with reference to one particular aspect.

52,620. What was that particular aspect?—Its bearing upon the objects of your inquiry.

52,621. That is with regard to the land available for certain purposes?—The land that you may be able to find capable of advantageous or profitable occupation.

52,622. I would like to ask a question or two about that, because you mention it in that way. What object could it serve, or how could it help us, to tell us about the feuds and the 'fights,' the reivings and the raidings, the plunder and the 'pillage' that took place two or three hundred years ago in the Highlands?—That was merely to show when the attention of the Highlanders was given to agriculture,—when it actually began.

52,623. It is simply a garnishing of the subject?—It was just to point to a date when this subject might with any usefulness be taken up.

52,624. Which subject, please?—The subject of the crofting system.

52,625. Do you hold the crofting system responsible for these things?—Oh, no; but I wanted to bring out that there was no necessity for going further back, in respect that little or no attention was paid to agriculture in the shape of crofting or in any other form, until a certain date, and I merely incidentally mentioned the state of the country before that date.

52,626. I am finding no fault with the subject being mentioned by you, but you stated yourself that it was to help us in this inquiry, and I wished to connect it with the objects of our inquiry?—Well, I drew a parallel between the state of the Borders and that district, and the state of the Highlands, and I mentioned that the decay of the crofting system or small tenancies began in the Lowlands or in the Border lands a century earlier than in the Highlands, and I had to show how that had taken place.

52,627. Then with regard to the picture you drew of the Highlands, you used some very strong language, Mr Malcolm?—Not so strong as many of the recognised authorities do.

52,628. Such as?—Such as Burt, and Pennant, and Knox, and Walker; and in the present day, Skene.

52,629. I attach more importance to what Skene says than to anything said by those other Englishmen?—You will find in my paper several extracts from Skene.

52,630. Does he record only such things as 'feuds 'and fights, reiving and raiding, plunder and pillage, 'and frequent crime of even deeper dye' which you say 'continued to stain the moral and political life, 'and ruin the social condition, of the Highland people, 'till upon the complete collapse of the rising of the 'clans in 1745, adequate measures for the subjugation 'of the disloyal chiefs and their followers were at last 'successfully applied?'—You may deduce that from many passages in Skene, I think.

52,631. Is Skene's history not more taken up with the social institutions of the Highlands?—It is chiefly that, and in describing the progress of ownership and occupation of land, and a good deal is taken up with ecclesiastical matters; but he also deals with the social state of the Highlands.

52,632. But the result of Skene's researches goes to show that there was a state of matters in the Highlands, social and otherwise, as far advanced as there was in any other part of the country?—Yes, I admit that both the Lowlands and the Highlands were in the same condition at one time.

52,633. Then, I presume, you were not comparing the Highlands of that time with the Lowlands of that time; you were rather comparing the Highlands of that time with the Highlands of to-day, or the Lowlands of to-day?—In one part of my paper I do compare it with the Lowlands, and I showed that the Lowlands got into an improved condition quite a century earlier than the Highlands. That was my main object in describing the condition of the Highlands up to a certain date.

52,634. What was the nett result of Mr Skene's researches, with regard to the ecclesiastical system in the Highlands, for instance?—How do you mean?

52,635. What state of civilisation did it show?—Oh, at one period he states that the Highlands were in a comparatively civilised state. But as far as I recollect, that was at a very early age, from the sixth to the ninth century.

52,636. And what state of matters obtained at that time with regard to the land, when this civilisation existed?—I don't think we know very much about the state of the land at that time.

52,637. What does Mr Skene say on that point?—I do not recollect any special statement of his upon that subject.

52,638. What does Cosmo Innes, from whom you quoted, say as to the social system of the people at that time, and particularly with regard to land?—All the authorities that I know state that from the sixth to the ninth century there was a better condition of the population as regards social affairs than there was for several centuries later.

52,639. What system of land tenure existed at that time,—was it the feudal system?—It was Celtic feudalism.

52,640. You may as well talk of a white negro as of Celtic feudalism. Do you know any Celtic country that had a feudal system while it was a Celtic country?—Yes, Scotland was in that condition.

52,641. When,—at the time you refer to?—Yes, and for some time after.

52,642. What was the time of the Celtic feudalism?—You might describe it as the tribal epoch, perhaps.

52,643. Was not that the very antithesis of feudalism?—It grew into feudalism afterwards.

52,644. But by your admission, and by Skene's researches this state of high civilisation in the Highlands existed contemporaneously with the tribal system?—I should not say it was high civilisation.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

52,645. Comparatively?—Comparatively, yes.

52,646. And then the 'feuds and fights, reiving 'and raiding,' &c. came in with the feudal system, or was contemporaneous with the existence of the feudal system in the Highlands?—Well, you may take it so.

52,647. You do not deny it?—I don't think we have any very reliable information to go upon, earlier than this.

52,648. You mean written information?—Yes, or any information.

52,649. Except the information from philosophic inference?—I have not dealt with that.

52,650. But is it not a perfectly legitimate inference to draw that if you have a state of comparative civilisation, the social institutions must have been beneficent at that time?—I do not mean to say that these institutions were in the same backward condition; they must have retrograded after that date.

52,651. That is clear?—Yes.

52,652. I understand that the material that is available in the study of the language of the people is not accessible to you?—No.

52,653. And do you think it would be right to make any sweeping inferences with regard to a system of social polity not written, without a knowledge of the spoken language?—I must be content to take it through other sources, of course.

52,654. But, would you not think that one of the first qualifications for any gentleman who was making sweeping assertions of this kind, would be to make himself acquainted with all the materials, and to acquire the language?—I don't know whether that is quite necessary, and I am quite sure that most of the historians and others who have written upon that subject were not personally acquainted with Gaelic.

52,655. Do you include Mr Skene?—Mr Skene I do not know about.

52,656. Do you know that Mr Skene devoted several years of a laborious life to the acquisition of the language, before he ventured to write about it?—Very likely.

52,657. Mr Skene, a high authority on these matters, thought it necessary to acquire the language, and the deductions he drew are of a far less sweeping character than those you have drawn?—Of course, I could not devote any years to the acquiring of the Gaelic language for such a purpose as this.

52,658. But you admit you would be better equipped for the work if you had been able to do so?—No doubt; that follows.

52,659. And you will also admit that a Highlander by birth and extraction would be more likely to enter more fully into the subject?—Yes, if he had the same qualifications as the historians have.

52,660. And that being qualified in that one important element, he would be more likely to be well qualified from all points of view, all round?—Yes, but I am afraid we have unfortunately not got any of those historians.

52,661. So well qualified as you, and with the knowledge of Gaelic in addition?—No, but so well qualified as those historians on whom we rely,—the authorities from whom I have quoted.

52,662. Are you acquainted with the Irish historians?—I have read some Irish history of this subject, but I am not fully acquainted with it.

52,663. Nor with the writings of Dr Maclachlan and some others?—No.

52,664. Then, as to the picture you drew of the 'rievings and the raidings' and the disloyal Highland chiefs, I am not going to deny, Mr Malcolm, so far as I know that there may not be a great deal of truth in what you say when we come to a certain stage of Highland history. Then, you go on to attribute a good deal of what afterwards happened in the Highlands to two circumstances—the rebellion of 1745, and the suspension of the heritable jurisdictions. Then you make a statement which rather surprised me, I must confess, that the system known as the crofting system was established in 1746. I think that statement calls for a little explanation?—I think I stated that it was then or about then that they were first established as independent tenants.

Inverness. George Malcolm.

52,665. In 1746?—Or thereabouts.

52,666. Do you know the particular locality in the Highlands where this doing away with the sub-tenants was carried out on the largest scale at one time?—It greatly spread over the whole of the Highlands from that date,—that is what I mean.

52,667. I take it that there was what was called a tacksman who paid rent to the superior, and that the tacksman again had tenants under him?—Yes.

52,668. And, I presume, that what you mean in this statement, is that in 1746 these middlemen were done away with, and the man who cultivated the land actually paid rent direct to the superior?—I mean that it began about that date, but, of course, it took a considerable time to establish itself in all parts of the Highlands.

52,669. Are you aware that when the 'Sutherland 'clearances' were carried out between 1818 and 1826, that was adduced as a reason for doing it,—the doing away with the middlemen?—There may be some parts of the Highlands where the system had not established itself at that time.

52,670. And, as a matter of fact, there are parts of the Highlands where the older system still prevails?—There are many cottars and squatters who cling to the tacksman still.

52,671. Do you know in what part of the country that obtains most?—No, I don't know any special part of the country.

52,672. Then, I observe that you say that 'on the 'fusion of the crowns, and consequent transference 'of the Scottish monarch with many of his powerful 'nobles, from these immediate scenes of turbulence 'and lawless exactions to the English capital, a great 'improvement was affected.' Do you mean to say that the removal of the Scottish nobles to London was attended with great benefit to Scotland?—No; what I go on to say is that the power of the Crown was in that way so augmented that they were able to apply measures to the Highlands which reduced them to a state of comparative peace.

52,673. Which brought the rebellious nobles to their senses?—The chiefs in the Highlands, rather.

52,674. The element of turbulence was you say removed from the Highlands?—I said it began to abate at that time.

52,675. But you attribute what followed in the Highlands afterwards to the removal of the turbulent elements to the English capital?—Yes; I attributed it to the fact that the Crown was then made a great deal stronger, and was able to apply measures with more success to that end than formerly.

52,676. And great benefit was effected by the removal of the turbulent element of the nobles and chiefs to the English capital from Scotland?—The nobles and chiefs I refer to were rather those who went from the south of Scotland with the monarch to London, and were able there to concert measures for the reduction of the Highlands to a better political condition.

52,677. I don't deny it; that is the chiefs who were continually taking the law into their own hands, setting law and order at defiance, were removed and their power was broken?—They were not removed, I think.

52,678. The tendency was to draw them to London?—No, I don't say that the Highland chiefs were drawn to London at all; I say that their power was curtailed by means of the augmentation of the power of the Crown.

52,679. And that was a good thing?—Yes, inasmuch as it brought about a more peaceful condition of the Highlands.

52,680. They emigrated, in fact?—No; the point I make is that after this there was less fighting amongst themselves, and the Highlands were brought to a more peaceful and necessarily, I suppose, a more industrial condition.

Inverness. George Malcolm.

52,681. You took the turbulent element away, and then peace succeeded?—To a great extent it did.

52,682. I need not follow that part of your statement much farther. You then refer to advances and improvements that were effected since that time. I take it for granted that the strides forward that took place in all directions in the meantime were not confined to the Highlands alone?—No.

52,683. These apply to the development of the Lowlands and to the development of England in the same way?—Yes, and the effects were felt earlier in the Lowlands than in the Highlands.

52,684. I hope I am not mis-stating your opinions when I take it from the connection in which you mention these things that they followed as a result of certain events that took place in the Highlands and which we need not more specifically mention, but which have sometimes been euphemistically called a 'change in the 'rural economy' of the Highlands?—You are getting now to the age of sheep farming; yes, the sheep farmer followed the state of matters which we were discussing lately.

52,685. I take it also that you are under the belief that sheep farming is more scientific than the agriculture which preceded it?—Certainly, than the agriculture which existed in the Highlands applicable to sheep farming at that time.

52,686. Was the state of agriculture in the Highlands at that time very different from the state of agriculture in the Lowlands?—The Lowlands, as I have said, were about a hundred years in advance of the Highlands at that time, as regards the state of agriculture.

52,687. You quoted, I think, or referred to Sir John Sinclair?—Yes.

52,688. Sir John Sinclair was president of the Board of Agriculture at that time, and he was the moving spirit in collecting the Statistical Accounts as you may be aware?—Yes.

52,689. Have you read those Statistical Accounts?—I have read a good many of them.

52,690. Have you read those referring to the Lowlands?—Yes, some of them.

52,691. Do they show an advanced state of agriculture?—They certainly show a more advanced state of agriculture than in the Highlands. Reference is made in some of those writings to the Highlands at the same dates.

52,692. And is there as wide a gap between them as you have led us to suppose?—Yes, but I don't rely upon the writings of Sir John Sinclair alone as to that.

52,693. Who are the others?—Well, there are Walker, Anderson, and Burt's letters; and there are various other authorities, whom I have named in my statement.

52,694. You are no doubt aware how the Statistical Accounts were compiled,—not written by Sir John Sinclair, who was merely editor?—They were chiefly written by the parish ministers.

52,695. Were they not likely to be well-informed on the matters with which they dealt?—Yes, I should say so.

52,696. Have you any reason to doubt the accuracy with which these Statistical Accounts were compiled by the parish ministers?—I have not, and you will see that in a later portion of my paper I rely upon those Statistical Accounts in another phase of the question which I support.

52,697. And do these Statistical Accounts, in your opinion, show a state of matters in the Highlands a hundred years behind the Lowlands in point of agriculture?—Yes, they do, in some instances; they exhibit a state of agriculture in the Lowlands a good deal in advance of that in the Highlands.

52,698. 'A good deal'; that may mean more, or it may mean less. Your statement, however, is 'a hundred 'years'; do you not want to stick to that?—Well, you must take that roundly, because I took into account other authorities than the Old Statistical Accounts.

52,699. Compare the state of farming at Invergarry and Glenquoich at that time; was there much difference between the system of farming carried on at Invergarry Castle and that carried on in Glenquoich?—An immense difference.

52,700. In the two places, beside each other?—Oh, no, I thought you meant as compared with elsewhere. There was nothing to farm at Glenquoich in those days,—I mean to cultivate.

52,701. What is your authority for saying that?—The old accounts of the estates, and the old maps. They show no trace of cultivable land there at all.

52,702. You say so?—Yes.

52,703. I say different, and I have been there. Of course, that is a matter of opinion?—If I had been along with you, I probably could have explained what you had seen.

52,704. Now, with regard to the improvements that you have mentioned, and their bearing upon our inquiry. Those advances of which you speak have undoubtedly taken place?—Yes.

52,705. Then, if there was a distribution of population upon the land, would not all those advances and all those improvements in science to which you referred tend to overcome any difficulties they might have had before?—Do you mean in the last century, or when?

52,706. The various advantages you enumerated,—the improvements in farming, improvements in means of communication, the daily post, the money order office, and all those other advantages mentioned in your paper?—I beg your pardon,—you are referring to our own local estate at present?

52,707. To anywhere you like?—And your question is that if these had existed last century there would have been a different state of matters? Of course, anyone would admit that; if they had had the same appliances and the same advantages, the state of agriculture would have been very much more advanced.

52,708. As far advanced as you will find anywhere in the country?—As anywhere in the Highlands, having the same climate, and otherwise the same natural conditions.

52,709. Do all these improvements not amount to an enormous change, in your opinion, Mr Malcolm?—They do.

52,710. Take for instance what has been brought forward over and over again as a difficulty in the way of re-peopling these glens,—the wintering question. It has been admitted by landlords before us over and over again that if you could get over the difficulty of wintering in those glens, their objections would be removed?—As to sheep farming only.

52,711. Sheep farming particularly?—There is no doubt that wintering is the great difficulty with regard to sheep farming in the Highlands, coupled at present, of course, with the very low prices that are obtained for stock.

52,712. Have you ever seen any hay imported into this country?—Yes; I have imported hay.

52,713. Which helped, I suppose, to winter your stock?—We bought it for arable farming stock and for horses, chiefly; we never use hay for sheep.

52,714. Have you seen it imported for wintering deer?—No, not in my experience.

52,715. Have you heard of it?—I have heard of it.

52,716. You have every reason to believe it has been done?—Yes.

52,717. Do you not think that habit is likely to increase, as the price of carriage goes down, and the price of hay also goes down?—Do you mean that there would be a larger importation of hay for the feeding of deer?

52,718. No, but available for any purpose?—Well, it depends on the necessity for it in particular seasons; certainly, if farmers have to buy hay to winter their stock, they will get more and more into difficulty.

52,719. How?—Because it would take from the receipts of the farm very largely to buy hay.

52,720. Have they not to send away sheep at present?—Yes, but they could not support sheep on hay alone as wintering.

52,721. And turnips?—Turnips and hay; but even these would not be nearly so good as a mixture of grass with them.

52,722. Possibly not so good, but it might suffice?—There would be a much larger mortality among the young sheep; and how would they be wintered? Would they be folded, or how would you get the turnips and hay to the sheep?

52,723. Bringing them to where the people were on the farms?—Well, there are two observations I have to make about that; you would have then to bring the sheep down from the hills to the low ground and give them the hay and the turnip there, bringing them all within a limited space.

52,724. As a matter of fact, that is what is done now?—The consequence of that would be that the ground upon which they stood would very soon get foul.

52,725. Certainly.—And if they got a single diet of turnips and hay, those sheep would never return to the higher ground.

52,726. Why not?—Because they would rather wait for more turnips and hay, and starve.

52,727. But shepherds put sheep, not where the sheep wish to be, but where the shepherds wish them to be?—The shepherds would no sooner be away than the sheep would come down again. There is the other alternative of taking the hay and the turnips up to the sheep.

52,728. Where,—to the mountains?—I was just about to say, you know that is impossible.

52,729. Of course; that is not done now?—No, and that is why I may be allowed to say that the system of silos has not been applied to hill sheep farming, nor is likely to be.

52,730. We know, as a matter of fact, that sheep are brought down from the high ground and kept on the lowest ground,—that the shepherd can put them on and off?—Not on a sheep farm; the young sheep are taken away.

52,731. But I am talking of sheep generally?—Of course, but they are distributed over miles and miles; you could not do that with turnips and hay.

52,732. They would soon gather for the purpose. It is done every day. Then, you talk a great deal about the destitution that existed in the Highlands, and you trotted out some of the well-known old quotations regarding it,—particularly one that speaks of the people having been reduced to mix oatmeal and blood. Are you aware of the origin of that particular quotation?—No, I do not know of any special origin of it.

52,733. Do you know where the thing took place?—I expect it took place in many places.

52,734. Did you read Fraser-Tytler's history of Scotland?—Yes.

52,735. Did you read Major Fullerton's account of the state of Ayr about that time quoted therein; and are you aware that it is there mentioned for the first time? And did you ever hear it quoted against the Lowlands?—I think it is sometimes quoted against the country generally, when there was a great deal of destitution.

52,736. And you said in regard to this, which was first written in Major Fullerton's Statistical Account of Ayrshire, that it took place in the Highlands?—Yes; I don't think the fact of its having also taken place in the Lowlands makes it any better.

52,737. But would that be an argument against re-peopling the depopulated parts of Ayrshire?—Well, whatever can be said against it in the Highlands may of course be said against it in the Lowlands.

52,738. And, do you think that is a state of matters, even if it ever did exist in the Highlands, that would be likely ever to recur?—No, I do not say it is likely to recur.

52,739. Then, you were very liberal in attributing motives to people who held different opinions from yourself in this matter; I am not going to trouble you with quotations to prove that, but, I suppose, you will admit that it is the case?—I would like to say that I rather strove to avoid that.

52,740. Well, I don't think you were very successful.—I am of a different opinion; I don't think I have improperly imputed motives to people.

52,741. It would take up rather too much time if I were to look up the particular quotations I refer to, and we have already spent a good deal of time over this matter, and they speak for themselves?—Of course, in one or two cases it was impossible for me to avoid alluding to the motives of people who were opposing our views of the question,—that would have been quite unavoidable, but I do not think I have said anything which could be construed into a personal charge against anybody.

52,742. I refer to attributing an unworthy motive to a person who wishes to impress upon the public what he considers to be the truth?—I don't think I have attributed unworthy motives to any such individual.

52,743. You have even, if you will excuse me, attributed ignorance to the Secretary for Scotland.—Well, he is a public man, quite open to be criticised; and it is easy to see that on the particular occasion I allude to, he was not well-informed.

52,744. He was ignorant?—He was not well-informed, and, therefore, of course, he was ignorant on certain points.

52,745. And you thought that a perfectly justifiable statement to make?—Certainly; a man like he, occupying a public position, is surely open to criticism on an occasion like this. It is a thing that is done every day, and upon all sorts of questions.

52,746. Then, referring to the Parliamentary Return on the subject of deer forests; you say there is grave reason to suspect many inaccuracies. Now, I want to know on which side it errs,—does it understate the area under deer, or overstate it?—You will see my position if you allow me to read a few lines of my reference to the matter. After mentioning that the Royal Commission of 1883 ascertained the existence of 109 deer forests with an acreage of 1,955,209 acres, I go on to say:—'The return of deer forests in 1891 brought the 'number up to 130, and increased the acreage to '2,552,383; but in this return, hastily prepared as it 'was, there is grave reason to suspect many inaccura- 'cies. For example, while in the return of 1883 the 'extent of each forest is clearly headed "Area in '"statute acres," with replies that are believed to be 'correct, the corresponding column in the return of '1891 is headed "Estimated extent," with figures 'following which are in many cases mere haphazard 'estimates indeed. Here in no fewer than 65 cases, 'being exactly one-half of the whole, the acreage is 'stated in round figures terminating in three ciphers. 'In several cases alternative areas differing to the 'extent of 5000 acres are stated. In 72 cases common 'to both returns, the acreage set down in 1891 differs 'from the acreage stated in 1883. In 49 of these cases 'the areas are larger in the return of 1891 to the 'extent, in cumulo, of 319,900 acres. In the remain- 'ing 23 cases the areas are less to the extent of 43,786 'acres, leaving an unaccounted for difference of 276,114 'acres.' Then I go on to show more reasons for holding the Return to be untrustworthy.

52,747. Do you know what means were taken to compile that Return of 1891?—There was simply an order sent to the Crown Agent to have it compiled, and it was all done within a few days or a few weeks. [The Chairman.—Were there not two editions of it?—Yes, but the only difference between the first and the second edition was that the lowest altitude was given as well as the highest in the latter.]

52,748. That was omitted from the first edition, and the House of Commons returned it for the order to be carried out?—Yes.

52,749. Well, then, let us understand the authority for the returns you are comparing. You say that the return of 1891, which was a Parliamentary return, and consequently an official return, contained 'grave inac- 'curacies,' and you have pointed out what you consider to be inaccuracies. The Crown Agent, I presume, would have sent out to the various landlords notices to supply him with information?—He did, I believe; a circular with a schedule attached was sent.

52,750. Therefore, if there are any inaccuracies it would not have been the Crown Agent's fault?—Not at all.

52,751. The fault must have lain in the information which was supplied to him?—Yes.

52,752. And it was supplied by the landlords?—Yes, so far as I know.

52,753. What motives would the landlords have for overstating the acreage under deer?—The fact that so many of the returns made are in round figures, consisting chiefly of ciphers with some other figure in front, leads me to suppose that they took no trouble about the matter; they were only asked to send in an estimated extent; they were not asked to send in the actual extent.

52,754. In fact, they did not order a special survey to be made for the purpose?—No; and therein I point out the difference between that and what was done on the occasion of the Napier Report. [The Chairman.—Did you make any communication to the Crown Agent of that kind, before putting down the statement we find here about the return?—No, because I did not know about it till the return appeared. Q. But I mean before you wrote this passage in your paper?—No, I did not.]

52,755. Then as to the return of 1884, how was it made, and what is the authority for it?—The Commissioners of that day sent a request to the landlords to fill up all the particulars with regard to their deer forests; first of all, they were asked whether they had any deer forests, and if they had, they were asked to fill up the particulars called for, and to produce maps or plans of the deer forests. The Commissioners got all that information; they also got the maps, and they employed a surveyor to measure those maps for themselves; and the results of that quite independent inquiry are given as an appendix to their report. I presume scarcely anything else could have been done to make that return accurate.

52,756. But it was based on information supplied by the landlords, as in 1891?—Of course, the Commissioners could not get the information otherwise; but they had the maps to check it all with.

52,757. What is your particular objection to ciphers at the end?—I have no objection to ciphers, but they lead me to suppose that those who made such Returns could not have taken great trouble to get at the true extent of their deer forests.

52,758. Well, I am looking over the list of deer forests in Scotland as supplied by the Highlands and Islands Commission of 1883, and I find that every area except two ends with a cipher?—But that is a very different thing from three ciphers alongside each other.

52,759. I find some with three ciphers there also. May I ask what was your part, Mr Malcolm, in the compilation of this abstract in the Report by Lord Napier's Commission?—I had nothing whatever to do with it, beyond providing my share of the information. But previously I had prepared a list of deer forests of my own, which probably started the Commissioners to make an independent inquiry; and I am glad to say that the results I had arrived at months before the Commissioners took up the matter at all, tallied within a very few thousand acres with what they themselves found to be the case.

52,760. You mean that both of you measured the maps?—I did not measure the maps, but I got information from all the landlords,—probably the same information as regards the extent which they supplied to the Commissioners; but the Commissioners not being satisfied with the figures alone, called for maps, and had the maps measured to check the figures they had got from the landlords.

52,761. You find fault with the return of 1891 on the ground that it over-estimates the amount that was afforested subsequent to 1883?—That is one point.

52,762. Are you aware that deer forests have been omitted from the Return altogether?—I don't know of any, but I know there are some put into the Return of 1891 as having been made prior to 1883 which are not in the 1883 Return.

52,763. And some areas that are deer forests now are not returned in either of them?—A few deer forests may have been made since 1891.

52,764. But some that were made in the year 1890?

—I don't know about that; I am not aware of any one that was not included.

52,765. Then, with regard to Highland clearances, you said that sweeping statements and gross exaggerations were indulged in by certain parties. What do you refer to particularly there?—I refer to certain books which I have read on the subject, but I do not want to be personal.

52,766. Would you include books that were written by eye-witnesses of those clearances?—I should take them as the best authorities.

52,767. I suppose you have read Donald Macleod's 'Gloomy Memories'?—Yes.

52,768. Is that book included within the sweep of your condemnation?—Yes, I think that writer is not at all a good authority on the subject.

52,769. Who is the best authority, do you think?—I don't know that there is any special authority to be quoted; but what we know as the 'Sutherland clearances' formed the subject of a judicial inquiry.

52,770. No, I beg your pardon; I think you are in error there.—Well, of a trial, at any rate; a criminal trial.

52,771. That was merely an incident, was it not? [The Chairman.—Specific charges against one man arising out of the clearances formed the subject of a judicial inquiry].—Well, that led to a very full investigation of the subject.

52,772. What better means of knowing could you have than the statements of the eye-witnesses who saw those things?—My conclusions are drawn from reading all the evidence on the subject which I could get.

52,773. You saw nothing of them yourself?—I thought the accounts given by some writers were apparently very much exaggerated, and that to a great extent they were not the statements of eye-witnesses at all, but statements to the persons who wrote those books, by people whose statements were never tested in the ordinary way.

52,774. Have you ever read Donald Macleod's 'Gloomy Memories?'—Yes.

52,775. Was not Donald Macleod on the spot, and did he not see those houses burning?—If Donald Macleod was really an eye-witness of all these things, how came it that he was not a witness at the trial of Mr Sellar?

52,776. He was not cited, I presume?—But he might have had himself cited.

52,777. The Sutherland clearances were not what was at stake in the trial?—Well, he writes about the Sutherland clearances, and he complains that the evidence at that trial was not fully gone into; and yet there he was, probably the strongest witness that could have been got for the Crown, and he never appeared.

52,778. Perhaps that was not the only irregularity with regard to that trial.—Perhaps so; but he states that he himself saw part of what happened, and if so, he would have been the best witness to speak about it.

52,779. He was in a position to know all the facts, and we have his unshaken word to this day. Then, I observe that you refer to objections on the score of the climate. We have had these objections so often that I am not going to put many questions to you on the subject. You state that the climate would be an obstacle to the creation of such holdings as we have been talking about; but do you not live here all the year round?—Yes.

52,780. Do you find any difficulty in the matter of weather?—No, personally I do not, but what I speak about in that connection is the effect of the climate upon cultivation.

52,781. Do you cultivate any yourself?—Scarcely any, I am sorry to say.

52,782. Have you a farm?—Yes, I look after a small home farm.

52,783. Do you get good crops?—No, we do not.

52,784. Are the crops very bad?—Not very bad; but some years they are so much destroyed that they are practically unfit for human food.

52,785. What destroys them?—The rain, and sometimes snow overtakes the crop before we can get it in.

52,786. How many years are you able on an average to secure a crop?—At Invergarry we are able to get a crop in some shape or other every year; but further up the glen that is impossible.

52,787. Where there are no crofts?—There are patches of arable land up the glen; but there they make no attempt to ingather the crop in a ripe state; they gather it unripe.

52,788. Where is that?—About Glenquoich.

52,789. Do they belong to the gamekeepers?—No, there are some small tenants and crofters there, as you saw the other day, as well as gamekeepers.

52,790. But you who live in the glen have an average crop?—I would not say it is an average crop when compared with other parts of the country.

52,791. Do you not raise fruit about Invergarry?—We raise small fruit; we all know that small fruits grow well enough; but we cannot grow well the larger fruits,—apples, pears, and the like—in the garden at Glengarry. Most of the fruit is raised in hot-houses.

52,792. What is the difference in height between Invergarry House and Loch-Quoich?—Upwards of 400 feet.

52,793. What is the whole height of Glenquoich?—The level of the loch, which is practically the level of the house, is I think 555 feet.

52,794. And what do you say is the difference between that and Invergarry?—Loch-Oich, upon which Invergarry House stands, is only 98 feet above sea-level.

52,795. Is the house on the same level as Loch-Oich?—It is about 20 feet above it.

52,796. Where is the highest cultivation in the Great Glen, do you know?—They do cultivate up to 600 or 700 feet, I suppose, in patches.

52,797. Will they reach 1000 feet?—Not to my knowledge.

52,798. Nine hundred feet?—Not to my knowledge.

52,799. Do you know Glen-Urquhart?—Yes.

52,800. Do you say there is no land in cultivation every year in Glen-Urquhart above 900 feet high?—I don't say they do not attempt it, but I say they do not cultivate it successfully.

52,801. Is it not the only cultivation they have got?—Yes.

52,802. And they are very glad to have it?—They must have it if they are to carry on their crofts every year.

52,803. And they have a crop every year?—They have a crop, of a sort.

52,804. It is good?—No, not always.

52,805. It is not good always anywhere?—I mean that the crops at Glen-Urquhart are often overtaken by storms in the autumn.

52,806. But the same thing happens in the south; the hop crop in the south of England is often destroyed by frost,—are you aware of that?—No, not nearly so often.

52,807. No, but, as a matter of fact, it does so sometimes?—It may be so in the higher parts of England.

52,808. I am talking of the hop country in England, where the crop is frequently destroyed by frost?—And by snow?

52,809. By frost, at all events?—Frost happens everywhere, but I never heard of hop crops in Kent being destroyed by snow.

52,810. But if they are destroyed by frost, is it not the same thing?—I admit the result is the same.

52,811. What is snow but rain that falls in a frozen state?—Yes.

52,812. The important point is that when it goes below the freezing point it does not matter much so far as the effect is concerned?—It may be a very exceptional thing in the south.

52,813. Then you made a very strong statement [I forget in what connection] about the existence of 'outrages, lawlessness, and intimidation.' Is that the case on the estate over which you have the control?—No, certainly not.

52,814. Where did this occur?—Cases of it occurred in Skye, and cases of it occurred in the Lews.

52,815. Do you refer to the Ben-Lee trouble, and the subsequent imprisonment of certain people in Edinburgh?—That was one instance, but there were later cases, especially in the Lews.

52,816. Are you aware of what happened in regard to that particular case you have alluded to, at Portree?—Yes.

52,817. Is it not the case that the people claimed the right of grazing on Ben-Lee?—Yes.

52,818. And that the landlord denied that they had the right?—That is not what I complained of at all.

52,819. But I am taking this case as a sample of what happened, and I want to test the value of your statement about these things. Let me refresh your memory in regard to it. The people said they had got this grazing on Ben-Lee, and that in virtue of it their rent had been increased; they alleged that the landlord subsequently denied that they had got that right, and gave the right to a neighbouring large tenant. The people persisted in their demand and they drove their cattle and sheep on to the hill, but an Interdict was got from the Court of Session to prevent them. They disregarded the Interdict; they were arrested; they were tried; and they were imprisoned in Edinburgh. That is so, is it not?—Yes.

52,820. John Macpherson of Glendale, being one of the men?—Yes.

52,821. Afterwards the Crofters Commission was appointed by an Act of Parliament; on being applied to, they investigated the circumstances, and Sheriff Brand here compelled the landlord's factor to produce the very document the existence of which had been denied in the House of Commons; am I correct so far as you know?—I am not here to dispute all that.

52,822. Now, sir, I ask you, who were guilty of the lawlessness and the outrage?—All that surely did not justify the people in resorting to violence?

52,823. Were they not right after all?—They may have been right, but there was lawlessness all the same.

52,824. Did not a judicial tribunal impartially appointed, find that these people were right? Have they not the grazing to this day?—I admit all those facts, but do you ask me to believe that they justified the resorting to violence?

52,825. I do not ask you as to that, but I ask you if that is according to your belief, and according to fact?—I have said that I do not dispute it.

52,826. You attribute to people who were so ill-used as that, outrages, lawlessness, and intimidation?—I say there were several cases of these; and no matter what the circumstances were, the people were not justified in resorting to violence to man or beast, as occasionally happened.

52,827. What was the violence to the man, that you refer to?—There were attempts at it; I remember one occasion when a vehicle was being driven along a road in Lewis, stones were placed on the road, evidently with the intention of doing damage to the vehicle and its occupants.

52,828. And what damage was done?—And we know that damage was done to cattle, their tails being cut off.

52,829. Where did that happen?—In the Lews; I do not remember the exact place at this moment.

52,830. You had better do that; it is well to be very accurate, you know, because we will have them investigated?—I am told it happened at Galson.

52,831. What was done at Galson?—I believe there were several cases of cattle being maimed.

52,832. Do you refer to the cattle belonging to Mr Helm, the tenant of Galson farm?—Yes.

52,833. Well, what more?—I am not prepared to name the number of cases.

52,834. But you spoke in the plural number?—I read them fully at the time, in the newspapers.

52,835. Now, as to intimidation, what have you got to say? Who was intimidated?—The neighbouring tenants were often intimidated.

52,836. Tell me their names?—Mr Helm was intimidated, for one.

52,837. Who more?—There were raids in the Park deer forest, which intimidated a number of people, the servants there.

52,838. Servants of whom?—Servants of the proprietor or lessee of the deer forest.

52,839. What did they do in consequence of the intimidation?—These people were prevented from the use of their occupations.

52,840. Is that all the intimidation? Were the servants driven away?—Everything was driven away for a time.

52,841. Were the servants driven away from the service in which they were employed?—No, but they were prevented from performing their duties at the time.

52,842. Did they suffer in any way from that? Did they lose their wages?—That I cannot tell you.

52,843. Were they dismissed from their employment?—I expect not.

52,844. They continue to be in the employment to-day?—So far as I know, they are, but I really do not know.

52,845. So that example vanishes. I hope your other statements have more foundation, Mr Malcolm. You have stated that your own inquiry as to the area under deer in Scotland was confirmed by the Napier Commission; I presume that refers to the investigation as you have already mentioned?—Yes.

52,846. Then the total in the Napier Report is not your total?—No.

52,847. Was it drawn up by you in the form in which it now appears?—Not at all; it may be more or less in the same form as my own, which you will find in a later volume of the report, but I had no hand whatever in drawing up the official figures.

52,848. You also referred to the Sutherland reclamations being a failure?—Yes.

52,849. In what way do you say they were a failure?—They are obviously a failure, inasmuch as they were undertaken for the purpose of creating farms to be cultivated, and that upon its being found that crops would not ripen there, the lands have been allowed to go out of cultivation.

52,850. I think it is only fair to you to say that you have qualified your statement with regard to them by saying that they were not from the beginning meant to be small holdings?—Yes.

52,851. Are you aware also that it was publicly announced that the object of the reclamations was to so increase the amount of improved pasture, that it would be unnecessary for the sheep farmers who held these farms to send their sheep to Ross-shire to winter?—I never heard that.

52,852. That is a statement of the Duke of Sutherland, which I heard?—The present Duke, or the late Duke?

52,853. The late Duke, who carried out the reclamations. He stated that the object was not to make small holdings [in which respect your statement is quite correct], but to increase the amount of permanent pasture on the sheep farms, so as to obviate the necessity of sending the sheep to Ross-shire to winter?—How could that be?

52,854. But that is so; it is not a question of opinion, it is a question of fact?—It is not according to my information.

52,855. But it is a fact, according to my hearing; it was stated publicly by the late Duke of Sutherland at a meeting at which I was present?—Well, I am not in a position to admit that.

52,856. Indeed! But you admit that the reclamations were not undertaken for the purpose of making small holdings?—I understood they were for larger farms.

52,857. Are you aware that some small holdings were made in those reclaimed lands, both at Lairg and at Kildonan?—They might have been made subsequently out of the wreck of the affair.

52,858. Not altogether; some were. The process has been the other way, I am sorry to say; the small holdings I refer to were made from the commencement, and are you aware that it was proved to our satisfaction at Lairg, that the small holdings that were so made are the only ones that are now under cultivation?—I know that a small part of the reclaimed land is still in cultivation, and this may be the part you refer to.

52,859. But is it not a remarkable fact that while the land that was reclaimed and let in large holdings, is all out of cultivation, every small holding that was made there has never been out of cultivation, and is in cultivation at the present moment?—That is just another instance of the determination of some crofters to crop, no matter what the circumstances are.

52,860. And they are very well pleased to have the land?—I do not know the state of these small holdings; indeed it is not according to my information that there are any.

52,861. My colleagues here will bear me out.—Oh, I accept it from you as a fact.

52,862. Don't you think it is a remarkable testimony to the efficacy of small holdings?—I don't know all the circumstances, and therefore cannot speak about that.

52,863. But would it not be well for you to be acquainted with all the circumstances, before making such sweeping statements?—I had supposed I had done so; I took no end of trouble to procure information for this Commission.

52,864. If you read the evidence given by Mr Maclean, the Duke of Sutherland's factor, at Lairg, you will see that it is so. You referred to the supreme industry of the Highlands, I think. What did you mean by the 'supreme industry of the Highlands'?—I may have referred to sheep farming, but I don't know that I used that precise expression.

52,865. I am bound to say that was my impression at the time. However, you did refer to sheep farming?—Yes.

52,866. Then the removal of the people was followed by the introduction of sheep farming?—The two things took place about the same date, but I do not admit that the removal of the people was entirely owing to the introduction of sheep farming.

52,867. But the removal of the people was followed by the introduction of sheep farming?—Yes, the introduction of sheep farming occurred about the same time.

52,868. What may be called a 'concatenation of circumstances?'—I suppose so.

52,869. This 'supreme industry of the Highlands' followed the occupation of the people when they were cleared off the land; and how long did it last successfully?—It was in the end of the sixties or the beginning of the seventies that sheep farming began to decay.

52,870. But now, I suppose you will admit sheep farming is a failure?—I say, of course, that it is not a profitable occupation at present.

52,871. Not profitable even to the landlord?—No, not in comparison with other opportunities he may have of letting that sort of land.

52,872. So the supreme industry has given way to the most supreme industry, I presume?—I hope that sheep farming may yet revive.

52,873. But then, what will become of the deer forests?—The land in deer forests is, generally speaking, land that is not so well adapted for sheep farming as for the object to which it is at present devoted; and I expect that all that land, or nearly the whole of it, will remain as it is.

52,874. And only the area that is at present devoted to sheep will be devoted to sheep in future?—I expect there will be no great change.

52,875. Have we not heard that frequently before?—Heard what, may I ask?

52,876. That the area under deer forests is fixed once and for all?—No, I don't think anything was stated quite dogmatically about that.

52,877. Did you convene the meeting of landlords in Inverness in the year 1885?—I think I did.

52,878. Do you remember the statements that were made at that meeting?—I remember them generally, but it is so long ago that they are not fresh in my memory.

52,879. Are you aware that it was because of assurances given by the landlords at that time—that sheep farms as they fell vacant would be given to the people, —that the Crofters Bill was allowed to pass with all the restrictions as regards enlargement of holdings?—I never heard of assurances of the kind being given by anybody, as far as I recollect.

52,880. Were they not given by the landlords at that time?—No.

52,881. Was the meeting I have referred to not convened to consider the Crofters Bill which had been printed?—The meeting took place before the Crofters Act was passed.

52,882. That is exactly what I state; that the Bill was printed, and before it was passed, when it was perfectly well known what the intentions of the Government were?—The meeting, according to my recollection, took place at least a year before any Crofters Bill appeared; and it was because the Crofters Bill appeared, and the legislature had undertaken to deal with the question, that no further action was taken upon the lines of the landlords' meeting.

52,883. And the landlords assured the Government that in any legislation they might pass they—the landlords—would look after the giving of the land to the people, and that the present time was particularly favourable, as sheep farms were going out of lease?—I never heard of anything of that kind being done. I am sorry that I did not bring with me a copy of the resolutions which were passed at that meeting.

52,884. It may not be in the resolutions, but it certainly was in the speeches?—Well, the resolutions were the outcome of the meeting, at all events.

52,885. No doubt.—I assure you that what you have just stated is entirely new to me.

52,886. Are you aware also that the Commission of 1883 made a strong recommendation against further afforestment of land?—No, they made no such recommendation; they made a recommendation that no further afforestment should take place below a certain limit.

52,887. That further afforestment should not take place?—Below a certain altitude.

52,888. Have deer forests been formed since below that altitude?—Yes, some of them have, or parts of some have; but, of course, that was merely an expression of opinion, and I don't think it was even one of the conclusions of their Report. I may also state that they distinctly recommended that no interference should take place with existing deer forests, either at that time or in the future.

52,889. But they strongly deprecated the formation of more deer forests?—No, only to that extent, below a certain altitude.

52,890. Did Lochiel, who was himself a Commissioner, not state here yesterday that they made an absolute recommendation?—Yes, but Lochiel made a mistake. He inadvertently fell into a slight error in agreeing with a question put to him as to whether the Napier Commission had made such an absolute recommendation. [The Chairman.—Did Lochiel ask you to make that correction upon his evidence?—Oh, no; but if I am asked whether I agree with what Lochiel said here yesterday, I answer that Lochiel was slightly in error on that occasion.] The question was put to him whether all afforestment was not forbidden or deprecated by the recommendation of the Napier Commission, and Lochiel agreed to that. But you will see from the terms of the Report itself, pp. 94–95, that that recommendation is limited or qualified in the way I have stated.

52,891. But you do not deny that a great deal of land has been afforested since, that is under the 1000 feet limit?—Oh yes, I do not think that that recommendation has been observed in all cases.

52,892. And that no attempt has been made by the landlords as a whole to give the land back to the people?—The landlords have discovered if they did not know it before that it would be quite impossible to adhere to a limit of that kind. [The Chairman.—But have not the landlords deliberately set at naught these words of Lord Napier's Report:—'Provisions should be 'framed . . . by which the areas which might hereafter 'form the most appropriate scene for expanding cultiva-

'tion, and small holdings, should be preserved from curtailment'?—Does that apply to the whole subject, my lord, or only to the part below the 1000 feet?—That applies to the whole subject; these are the general observations made introductory to the statement about the 1000 feet.—We have the fact that 21 deer forests have been made since that was written in 1883.—Which deer forests are a setting at naught of this direct opinion and advice to the Government by Lord Napier's Commission?—Of course, to that extent it is.]

52,893. And contrary to what I hold to be the direct promise of the Highland landlords at this meeting?—No, I dispute that.

52,894. You do not admit that?—I know nothing about that.

52,895. We will have to refer to that again. Then, you told us of a great deal that would happen if deer forests were interfered with, so far as public burdens are concerned; you say that rates are paid upon deer forests, and if the forests were done away with, the rates that are at present exigible from forests would necessarily cease?—They would not altogether cease, but I say that the rental upon which the rates are imposed would in the case of the succeeding subject of taxation be so much smaller, that necessarily the amount of the rate would be smaller also.

52,896. Why would it be smaller?—Because the rental would be smaller.

52,897. You assume that?—I do.

52,898. That implies that acre for acre, the land in possession of the crofters in any given area pays less rent than is paid by deer forest?—Yes, that is so.

52,899. You hold that to be true?—Yes.

52,900. Did you hear Lochiel yesterday upon the subject of tenants' improvements?—Yes, I heard Lochiel's examination.

52,901. Do not all improvements increase the value of a subject?—They are expected to do so, but I am sorry to say they don't always do it.

52,902. Improvements do not always increase the value of the subject?—Take the Sutherland reclamations, for instance; I don't think the value of the Sutherland estate has been increased by these improvements.

52,903. You think not?—No.

52,903A. Are you aware how much the valuation of the parish went up in consequence of these reclamations?—I am aware that the representative of the Duke of Sutherland when he was being examined before the Napier Commission said that the result financially had been nil.

52,904. Who is your authority for that?—I think you will find it in evidence in the blue-book.

52,905. But who is the authority for the statement?—It was Sir Arnold Kemball, I think, who was talking,—the Duke's Commissioner.

52,906. Would you accept the Valuation Roll of the parish in which the reclamations were affected as a better authority?—The Valuation Roll, of course, should be conclusive.

52,907. Would you be surprised if the valuation of that parish has been increased 25 per cent. in consequence of that expenditure?—I would be very much surprised if it could be shown that the increase of 25 per cent. arose altogether from those improvements.

52,908. But does it not follow that land that was before black heather and bog, is more valuable when it is grass?—The increase may be due to some extent to other alterations in the parish.

52,908A. But if it is not?—I should be surprised to find that it was due altogether to the reclamations.

52,909. But, as a general matter, do you hold that improvements in land do not increase its value?—Oh, not at all, quite the other way; but I say there are exceptions.

52,910. What is the use of talking of exceptions and leaving out of view the general rule?—I stated from the first that there were exceptions.

52,911. Does land that is occupied as a deer forest increase in value by improvements made on it?—Yes, in some cases.

52,912. Such as?—Roads, fences, building of houses.

52,913. Do not all these things take place where crofters are situated?—Not in the same way; I do not know of crofters who make roads.

52,914. But does not the subject increase in value as every improvement is made; and, as a matter of fact, have not rents been increased upon improvements made by crofters?—If it is a useful improvement, of course it must increase the value of the subject.

52,915. Is it not the case that crofters are improving tenants, as proved by evidence over and over again, while deer forests are not improving?—I do not admit that. I think a good many improvements which are useful to the whole community are carried out in deer forests, as well as those which are simply carried out for the convenience or comfort of the tenant.

52,916. Do you say that land in occupation of small holders does not increase in value and is not rated on the same scale as deer forests?—If the effect of their improvements is that rents are raised, and that increase of rent gets into the Valuation Roll, then, of course, they are to that extent contributing more to the rates.

52,916A. Is it not the fact as we heard yesterday that a man who was situated on a moor up at Lochgarthside, where he got land that was not worth many pence per acre; that he has improved that land, and now is paying a considerable rent for it. Has the value of that land not been increased by the amount of that man's labour?—Certainly.

52,917. Have you known a tenant of a deer forest do that?—They don't reclaim land, certainly.

52,918. Then, is it not the case that the rates would be paid upon the land, whoever held it?—Certainly, upon whatever the rental was.

52,919. It amounts to this, that if the tenant of the deer forest pays a large gross sum for rates, it simply shows that he holds an enormous extent of land?—Very likely, in connection with other things.

52,920. And if the land were held in any other way, the rates would be exactly the same?—Oh, no, because he pays a great deal for what might be called the amenity of the place, over and above the agricultural value of the land.

52,921. He pays upon the rent, simply?—He pays upon the rent, of course.

52,922. Like any other subject?—Yes.

52,923. And if acre for acre you increase the value of the land, you increase the valuation, and you increase the rates?—Certainly.

52,923A. And it does not at all follow that if the land were in the occupation of other parties, the rates would not be still exigible, and got?—I say that the same subject occupied as a deer forest yields a much larger rent than if occupied as a sheep farm.

52,924. Compared with the sheep farm, you get a bigger rent from the land as a deer forest?—Yes.

52,925. What is the difference, now?—It varies, of course.

52,926. Give us the case of the parish with which you are best acquainted. What was the rental of the Invergarry estate before there was a deer forest?—I don't know; there was a deer forest before I went there.

52,927. But what difference does it make upon the rent, when a sheep farm becomes a forest?—It varies in different cases, of course; but I should say that sometimes you get twice as much rent, and at other times half as much again.

52,927A. Let us be specific; you know the particulars of what took place since you came to Invergarry. What land, since you were responsible for the management, has been changed from sheep farm to deer forest?—Take Glenquoich; two farms were there afforested,—at least, they are deer forest now,—and I think that when the leases were given up, one of them was paying £800 and the other £650 or £700,—take it at £700.

52,928. That makes £1500. As deer forest what does it pay?—We were getting, I think, £800 for the shooting at that time.

52,929. That is £2300 in all, as compared with what?—We are now getting £3400.

52,930. Or £1100 of a difference?—Yes.

52,931. Now, what is the valuation of the parish?—The estates are partly in three parishes, but the whole valuation of the estate, as I have stated, is £7700 odds.

52,932. Would you kindly tell me what difference per £ would be made by £1100?—I cannot say.

52,933. Would it be a halfpenny in the £?—I cannot say.

52,934. Would it be a farthing in the £?—I cannot say, for this reason, that the rates are spread over three parishes.

52,935. But I should think you would have a general idea?—I cannot tell you without having the particulars of the rating.

52,936. Does it amount to a farthing in the £?—I really cannot say without having the rating of the parishes before me, and the total amount of the valuation.

52,937. I would have thought that a gentleman like you, who has advocated the system upon this ground so often, would have made that elementary calculation; certainly it is not unreasonable to expect that you would have done it?—I never had occasion to go into the subject in that way, and I do not think it is reasonable to expect me to carry in my head all the figures relating to the parishes.

52,938. This is a matter that is so often spoken about, and one that has been brought before us as an argument in favour of the continuance of the present system so often, yet you are not in a position to say that in the case we have been dealing with, the change would make a difference of a farthing in the £?—I believe it is much more than that; but as I say, I cannot give the exact figure, because I have not the particulars of the whole parish before me.

52,939. But you are not in a position to say that it would amount to a farthing in the £?—I am in a position to say that it would amount to a great deal more than that.

52,940. A shilling?—No, certainly not a shilling.

52,940A. A penny?—I cannot condescend on a figure.

52,941. Just so. Can you tell me, then, what additional expenditure has been made by the estate in order to obtain this increase in the valuation?—I gave the particulars, I think, in the statement I read yesterday.

52,942. I thought that was with reference to the expenditure by Lord Burton himself?—I gave both, though they were not detailed.

52,943. Then, can you say what return this increase affords upon the expenditure made?—No, I cannot say.

52,944. Does the difference of £1100 yield one per cent.?—I really cannot say; I have not the particulars.

52,945. It is very important to know that, but we can make the calculations afterwards. Now you say with regard to this subject, as to which you make such qualifications now, and concerning which you have not advanced a single statistic, that the withdrawal of the deer forest would be followed by financial collapse; and yet you are not prepared to say that the increase in the rental amounts to a farthing in the £ on the rates of the parish you are interested in?—If I have not given statistics, I have given what I consider to be very good reasons for my contention.

52,946. But you say distinctly that the withdrawal of the deer forest would be followed by financial collapse?—No, I think I conjoin with that something else,—I said the withdrawal of all the cultivated land and all the low-lying pasture as well as the deer forest.

52,947. I have taken it down and marked it with marks of quotation; however, we shall refer to the exact words. You say 'through the great rents 'obtained for the lease of sporting subjects, especially 'deer forests, the parish rentals are very largely in-'creased, and the pressure of taxation upon the poorer 'ratepayers is correspondingly alleviated. Over the 'whole of the sporting areas, this is computed to be 'not less than 25 per cent.; while in many Highland 'parishes the contribution of rates and taxes from 'sporting possessions is far higher, amounting in some 'instances to half of the whole rating In not a few 'of these parishes rates are abnormally though un-'avoidably high, reaching to 5s., 7s., and even 10s. per '£ of rental; and in such districts it is evident that 'a withdrawal of the sporting rental would be speedily 'followed 'by financial collapse.'—Yes, —in such districts.

52,948. But listen to your own words:—'Over the 'whole of the sporting areas, this is computed to be 'not less than 25 per cent.,' that is over the whole?—Yes.

52,949. What is your authority for the 25 per cent.?—I went into the matter minutely some years ago; I went over the whole of the valuation rolls in the counties we are dealing with at present, and the result is what I have stated; and in some parishes it is very much larger. I think I can find the paper containing my calculations on the subject. One of the papers which I wrote a year or two ago had reference to the subject of rating in Highland parishes, and in it I gave the result of the investigation I have just alluded to. I see it applies to Inverness-shire, Ross-shire, Sutherland, and Perth, and there is here a long list of parishes (giving the names of the parishes) the total rental, the sporting rental, and the percentage of the assessment contributed by the sporting rents. I have no objections to hand that in, if you wish it.

52,949A. By 'sporting rentals' do you mean the rents of deer forests?—No, they include also shootings and salmon fishings.

52,950. Oh, indeed; and who proposes to take these away?—I am not talking of them being taken away.

52,951. Then, what is the relevancy of them?—I am talking of the effect upon the rates.

52,952. But don't you see that the whole difference in making land for occupation out of the deer forests would be the difference between the pastoral rent plus the sporting rent, and the rent you now get for deer forest,—that is all that is attributable to deer forests. In your own case, you stated that difference as £1100, and you are not able to say that that difference amounts to one farthing per pound in the rating?—Oh, yes; I have stated that it must amount to a great deal more than that.

52,953. But don't you see the fallacy of your calculation?—No, I do not.

52,954. You say that if deer forests were done away with, all the sporting rental is done away with. Does that follow?—No, certainly not.

52,955. Before the land was made into deer forest, you got pastoral rent, I suppose, plus sporting rent, for it?—Yes.

52,956. So that all that is attributable to deer forest is the difference between that, and what you get now?—Yes.

52,957. That amount is all that you can legitimately ascribe to deer forest?—And that is by far the larger proportion of the rent.

52,958. Do you say that that amounts to 25 per cent. of the whole rates when it is distributed?—Yes, according to the calculation I made at the time.

52,959. But now you are proceeding in justification and in confirmation to read to us a statement which includes the whole sporting rent, and the fishings?—Very well, but let me explain that the percentages which I bring out here are much above 25 per cent.

52,960. How much is shown there?—There are up to 40, 48, and 60 per cent. The 25 per cent. refers to deer forest rents alone, not to the salmon fishings or the grouse rents. When you take these also into account, the percentage of the rates contributed by sport of all kinds is much higher than 25 per cent.

52,960A. How much higher is it?—I will give you examples, if you like:—In Harris, 40 per cent.; in Kilmonivaig, 48 per cent.; in Boleskine, 38 per cent.; in Laggan, 55 per cent.

52,961. What is about the average?—I expect the average would come out at something like 40 per cent. The lowest here is 25 per cent.

52,962. What is included in that?—The deer forest, the grouse moor, and the salmon fishing.

52,963. Now, can you give in these instances the value of the land when held as sheep farm, plus the other sporting value, and what they are now as deer forests where deer forests exist?—I said that the sporting deer forest rental alone contributes about 25 per cent., therefore it must be the difference.

52,964. And in the concrete example you have given, you state that the difference amounts to £1100; that is the enhanced rent as a deer forest?—Yes; £1112 is the exact figure.

52,965. And what percentage is that increase of the whole income of the parish?—It seems to me it is about a third of the whole rent, so it would be about 33 per cent.

52,966. And what would that amount to in the pound?—I really cannot say without having the valuation roll before me, because you cannot make the calculation without knowing the total valuation of the parish.

52,966A. No, that is true, but it is so elementary a fact in the computation that I am surprised you have not got it, and that before making a statement like this you should not be able to say how much it amounts to in the pound?—I can give the percentage, which I thought was quite enough.

52,967. Percentage does not give the rate per pound. Then in reference to our inquiry, you have told us I think that it is not feasible to make these new holdings, nor if feasible would it be desirable?—Yes; these are the propositions I started from.

52,968. And then you endeavour to make them good. Instead of that system, you suggested, I think, that there should be emigration?—Yes, that is one of the suggestions made.

52,969. Are you speaking here in your capacity of Secretary of the Highland Property Defence Association?—The Highland Property Association is the proper name.

52,970. That is your conclusion?—Certainly.

52,971. You said you were not a crofter, you were not a farmer, you were not a gamekeeper, you were not a deer forester, but you are an emigrant?—Oh, no, I am not an emigrant, although I am in favour of emigration.

52,972. You did not emigrate yourself?—No, I had no occasion to do so. If everybody were in the same position as I am, there would be no need for emigration.

52,973. If every man were an advocate of emigration, no man would emigrate,—they would all be advocating emigration. You migrated to the Highlands?—I came here to—

52,974. I hope you have not found it to your disadvantage to do so?—Oh, no.

52,975. You went on to say that all the emigration schemes hitherto had failed,—that they were deficient schemes?—Yes.

52,976. Do you think these schemes that have so notably failed were not gone into with great care?—No, I don't think they could have been, or they would not have been the failures they have turned out.

52,977. There was a Committee on Colonisation which, I think, had the benefit of evidence from yourself, and which afterwards formulated a scheme?—Yes.

52,978. Do you say that that was not an efficient scheme, which had the benefit of your own recommendations?—I had no hand in preparing that scheme; but I do say [I think I say so in my paper] that it is a scheme from which we may expect good results yet.

52,979. That is the only scheme, I think, that has been devised?—Yes.

52,980. Was it drawn upon your own lines?—Oh, no; I had nothing to do with the drawing of it.

52,981. But you gave evidence which, no doubt, influenced the members of that Committee?—I merely gave the same evidence as I gave yesterday, in favour of emigration.

52,982. But you have expressed approval of that report?—Yes.

52,983. And was that the first Committee on emigration before whom you ever gave evidence?—No, I gave evidence in favour of emigration before Lord Napier's Commission.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

52,984. They made recommendations also for Emigration?—They did.

52,985. Which have not been carried out?—No.

52,986. Why?—I explained that in my paper.

52,987. What did you say?—That no sufficient or well-organised scheme of emigration has yet been devised.

52,988. Except this one?—It remains to be seen whether this is to be successful.

52,989. Have you any reason to suppose that this one may not turn out a failure like the rest?—It may, but I say it has some hopeful features about it.

52,990. Are you aware that the essential part of it was a guarantee of £150,000 by the British Exchequer to the Government of British Columbia?—Any emigration scheme must involve an outlay of that kind.

52,991. Are you aware that an Act was passed empowering the Treasury to expend the sum of money I have mentioned?—Yes.

52,992. Are you aware that that has remained a dead letter?—So far, I believe, it has not been taken advantage of except in one or two cases.

52,993. Are you aware that the Columbian Government have never called upon the British Government to advance the amount of that guarantee?—No, but I expect that by-and-bye they will do so, and that the Act will be put into operation.

52,994. Are you aware that the Colonisation Board, appointed to carry out that scheme, was most carefully selected; do you know its composition?—No.

52,995. Do you know that the Secretary for Scotland is ex officio a member of it?—He may be, I do not know.

52,996. Do you know that the representative of Canada in London is also a member of the Board?—Probably he is.

52,997. And that the Land Companies of America and the Railway Companies of America are also represented?—Probably they are.

52,998. And is that not a strong Board, seeing that every interest is represented—except the interest of the people that you are going to deport?—Quite so.

52,999. Does not that satisfy you?—No, it does not; what I do say is that sufficient time to test that Act and that scheme has not been given.

53,000. How long do you suppose it should be before the result can be known?—It may take several years; we may have to wait for a more or less successful revival of the agriculture of America, including British Columbia.

53,001. Is the climate not good?—I believe it is.

53,002. There is no snow there?—I cannot tell you.

53,003. No frost, no rains, no blizzards there?—No, but the state of agriculture there is exceedingly depressed at present, as well as in this country.

53,004. What is the depression there owing to?—Low prices.

53,005. And will these revive in your opinion?—I expect so; I hope they will have a revival.

53,006. Will the production decrease, or the consumption increase—which of them?—The consumption of the crops they raise?

53,007. Yes.—I expect both the consumption and the price will increase.

53,008. And will the area from which the product is raised increase?—I would expect it to increase, if a large scheme of emigration were put into operation in British Columbia.

53,009. So that the result of your scheme of emigration would be to bring more land into cultivation, and bring down prices?—I have not said so: I do not expect that emigration from the Highlands of Scotland would have that general effect.

53,010. Then it is acknowledged that all these schemes of emigration have been a failure?—I acknowledge all previous schemes have been a failure, but I say that this one is in abeyance.

53,011. And that this one also has up to this time been a failure?—No, I do not admit that it has been a failure, because the time has not arrived to say it is a failure.

53,012. Has it not been acknowledged by the responsible Minister in his place in Parliament that the money could not have been devoted to a worse purpose?—Sir George Trevelyan stated that the other day, I believe.

53,013. Now then, to bring this question of emigration home, you yourself in your statement brought before us a most notable fact. There is a section in the Local Government Bill of 1889 empowering County Councils to raise money for the purpose of assisting emigration?—Yes.

53,014. And you remarked upon the astonishing fact that in no county in the Highlands has the County Council put that section into operation?—Simply because there have been no applications under it.

53,015. For emigration?—None that I know of.

53,016. What does that prove to you?—It proves,—at least it suggests to me, that there is no demand for emigration; and I admit that at present such is the case.

53,017. Only you are going to continue your crusade of enlightenment?—My opinion is that you will never get a solution of this question without the employment of emigration along with other remedies.

53,018. But then you wish to put the emigration into force before you put the other remedies into force?—I do not want to put emigration into force at all; I want voluntary emigration.

53,019. You are a member of the Inverness-shire County Council, are you not?—Yes.

53,020. Did it never occur to you to bring this section of the Act before the notice of the County Council?—It could only be brought before the County Council in the shape of an application for assistance.

53,021. Where do you find that?—Do you suggest that the County Council were going to canvass for people to apply to be emigrated?

53,022. Yes.—I do not think that would ever enter their minds.

53,023. Why not; if I were as enthusiastic an advocate of emigration as you are, I would certainly consider it my duty to bring before the County Council, if I had the honour to be a member of it, a proposal that this should be done?—For one thing I do not believe that the County Council is the proper instrument, so to speak, to carry out a scheme of emigration.

53,024. But is that not in the Act of Parliament?—Yes, it is there, but there is a great deal of other useless matter in the Act of Parliament, I am afraid. [The Chairman.—Do you describe the Local Government Act of 1887 as an Act which contains a great deal of useless matter?—I say there are some matters in it that are practically a dead letter. Q.—That should not have been there?—I do not say they should not have been there, but perhaps it was a mistake to put them there.]

53,025. Of course, you and I are agreed on that point, as I moved in Parliament that it should be left out of the Act; but other counsels and wiser ones evidently prevailed. Why did you not bring this matter forward; really and truly, why if you thought it was a beneficent and a useful thing, did you not suggest it to the County Council?—I remained under the impression, for one thing, that it could only be brought forward by someone who wanted to get the benefit of that clause.

53,026. Would it not occur to you as a propagandist, and a very ardent one on this point, that it would be a very good opportunity for you to enlighten the County Council of Inverness on this point by making even an abstract motion with regard to it in order to raise a discussion?—No, I never thought of that at all, but if I had I should have come to the conclusion that the County Council would not listen to me on such a subject.

53,027. The County Council would have none of it?—Yes, I believe that would have been so.

53,028. And they represent the people of Inverness-shire?—But it must be kept in view that the matter has never been brought before them in this county.

53,029. I must say that I am somewhat surprised at your position; if I were in your position and wanted to enlighten the public I would have brought this matter forward?—I am very much obliged to you for the hint; I may act upon it some day.

53,030. But you have not hitherto done it, and you have admitted that if you had done so, you would have got very scant support?—Yes.

53,031. How do you think so?—Because I do not think the County Council would consider itself the proper medium for such a thing at all.

53,032. Then, who would be the proper medium?—If you are to have a proper scheme of emigration you must have an Emigration Board.

53,033. But do not you see that before you could have an Emigration Board you would have to convert public opinion on the subject?—Oh, yes, I am assuming all the while that the demand for emigration will arise.

53,034. Then, with regard to the people who will not emigrate, are you surprised to find that they are averse to emigration?—Yes, I am very much surprised.

53,035. You are surprised that the Highlanders do not express a desire to leave their country and allow it to become deer forests?—No, that is not what I am surprised at; but I am surprised that they do not some of them go abroad for the purpose of bettering their condition.

53,036. Do you know the extent of land in the Highlands there would be for every man, woman, and child in it?—No, I do not think I do.

53,037. Would you be astonished to learn that it amounts to more than sixty times the average area of a croft in the Highlands?—I suppose that calculation is based on the whole area in the Highlands, but a great part of that consists of land, or loch, or whatever it is, upon which it is utterly impossible for any human being to live.

53,038. And that included in the divisor are all the people in the large towns, which far more than counterbalance that objection?—I think it is no use taking into account land upon which it is impossible even to live.

53,039. But surely that is far more than counterbalanced by taking in the population of the town of Inverness and all other urban inhabitants?—As an arithmetical calculation it may be.

53,040. And the arithmetic of it is very striking, is it not?—Well, I do not know; many arithmetical calculations are certainly striking.

53,041. And still in the light of that calculation you are surprised that the people of the Highlands do not emigrate?—I am.

53,042. But are you aware of the immense emigration there has been from the Highlands?—In former times I believe that was so. Only this very morning I read a paragraph in the newspaper in which it was stated that the Macdonalds of Glengarry who went away from this country I think in 1802, were making preparations to celebrate the hundredth year of their stay in Canada; and amongst other things stated they congratulate themselves upon the position they have reached in that Colony; so that in that case at least I conclude it must have been a good thing for the people to have emigrated.

53,043. But was it a good thing for the Highlands?—I think it was a good thing that a number of people went at that time; just as I think it would be a very good thing if more people went now.

53,044. But are you aware of the emigration from Glengarry, to prevent which the intervention of the King had to be called in?—No, I am not.

53,045. You never heard of that?—I know that these particular people were a portion of the Fencible Regiment which was disbanded at that time, and that they elected to go to America instead of remaining in this country.

53,046. Are you aware that the intervention of the King was called in in order to prevent the Highlanders of Glengarry from leaving the country?—I know that the Government deprecated the emigration that was going on about the beginning of the century in 1803 or thereabouts.

Inverness.

George Malcolm.

53,047. You quoted Dr. Johnson yesterday; have you read his views with regard to the depopulation of the Highlands?—Oh, yes.

53,048. You did not quote any of his diatribes against emigration?—I do not remember anything about it in Johnson; you may be quite right, but I don't remember it at this moment. I am quite aware, however, that so many people were leaving the country at that time that even the landlords took steps to prevent it.

53,049. Why do you say 'even the landlords'?—Well, they thought their estates were going to be depleted of people I suppose.

53,050. I suppose they had no other policy at that time than to keep the people there?—I do not know about that.

53,051. Did their power and their influence and their very income not depend upon the people being there?—I expect that may have been what influenced them—a fear that there would not be enough people remaining to take up their lands.

53,052. But there are enough people remaining now to take up all the land they can get?—Oh, I suppose so.

53,053. So it amounts to this; you are not able to give us any further assistance with regard to the land we are looking for than to tell us that there is none in the Highland district available for our purpose?—I have done my best to show what land you could get.

53,054. But you are not the individual just now, neither are you the representative of the Glengarry estate; you are the representative of by far the largest number of the Highland landlords at present. You tell us in the name of the gentlemen for whom you are here that there is no land in this wide district fit for the purpose for which we are deputed to inquire?—I do not say that; I say that there is not sufficient land for the purpose of your inquiry.

53,055. What do you mean by sufficient land for the purpose of our inquiry?—I say, that if you take all the arable land and all the low-lying pasture—

53,056. What have we got to do with that; you have read the terms of the remit, I presume?—Yes.

53,057. We are here to find out what land, if any, exists?—Yes.

53,058. And you say there is none?—No, I do not say that.

53,059. What do you say then?—I was about to tell you when you interrupted me. I have given in my paper an estimate of the arable land which may be got, and I have stated that if you take all the arable land, and all the low-lying pasture land from existing holdings, and give that to crofters, you would destroy the rest of the holdings as valuable subjects. I do not say that it is impossible to assign that land to the extent to which it exists, but I say that if you do so you will destroy other interests.

53,060. Such as?—The sheep farming interest, and forestry, and the sporting interest.

53,061. But if all the land is taken over how is any interest injured?—All that is fit for the purposes of the remit only.

53,062. If nothing be taken but whole holdings as they exist at present the proper equilibrium that you have referred to before would be maintained?—If you take the whole holdings of course it would.

53,063. No, but if the land that is taken is coterminus with holdings that already exist no damage will be done to any place, because there would be no portion of any individual sheep farm or of any individual deer forest left?—Of course, that would be the only way of doing it.

53,064. But would your objections be overcome if that were attended to?—Well, I think that the same rents could not be got for such holdings as are got for the present ones.

53,065. Then even that would not satisfy you?—No.

53,066. You would require satisfaction also as regards the rent?—Yes.

53,067. If satisfaction were given in that respect, and if satisfaction were also given with regard to seat, would your objections then be overcome?—No, I may state broadly that I am not in favour of the present system, or of a perpetuation of it.

53,068. But the object of any inquiry is to change the existing system?—Or to extend it.

53,069. Extension involves change, does it not?—Well, of course, if the change could be made without injustice to any one—

53,070. I will put it in this way. Are you and those you represent here to-day opposed in any form to the creation of more smaller holdings than exist at present?—They are opposed to it if it can only be done by the sacrifice of other interests, in which they are involved or which belong to them.

53,071. Let us be a little more definite. What are the other interests you speak of?—The interests of sheep farming; the interests of sport.

53,072. That is to say they are in favour of its being done if no sheep farm is interfered with and no deer forest is interfered with?—They are in favour of its being done, if it can be done without inflicting injustice on the present proprietors or lessees.

53,073. Let us consider what they understand by injustice. Is it not this, that at present they are perfectly willing that it should be done, provided no sheep farm is interfered with, or no deer forest as these exist at present?—I think that is practically the whole case.

53,074. They are in favour of something being done, but they object to anything being done which would interfere with the present arrangements, is that so?—They do not object to its being done, if it could be done without injustice to them.

53,075. Then, is it the case that they are perfectly willing that it should be done provided it be done at the expense of the crofters' holdings; is that what you mean?—I do not understand the question.

53,076. The distribution of land at present broadly speaking consists of deer forests, sheep farms, and crofters' holdings. We are appointed to look for land that, in our opinion, would be fit for forming small holdings. You say that those whom you here represent to-day are perfectly willing that smaller holdings should be formed, but you say that they object to their being made out of deer forests or sheep farms. Therefore, all that remains for us is to look at the crofters' holdings to see if new holdings can be made out of them?—Oh no, they do not object to their being formed out of sheep farms and deer forests, if that can be done without sacrificing the interests of other people.

53,077. Which people?—The landlords.

53,078. And the interests of the landlords I take to be the present arrangements?—Exactly, the present arrangements as far as they affect them.

53,079. They are in favour of its being done if the present arrangements are left alone, is that your position?—Yes, or safeguarded.

53,080. Mr Munro.—Your position as regards deer forests and sheep farms I understand to be this, that if any of these farms could be converted into small holdings without detriment to the landlords, you or the Association you represent would have no objection to that being done?—Exactly, that is my position; but, unfortunately, I hold the opinion that it is impossible to do that.

53,081. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Before putting any questions to you about the statement which you read yesterday, Mr Malcolm, I wish to put some questions to you about a pamphlet which you have published, entitled, 'The population, crofts, sheep-walks, and deer forests of the Highlands and Islands.' This pamphlet is very much the evidence you gave before the Napier Commission, revised and corrected?—It is an exact copy of it, as far as I recollect.

53,082. Now, this as well as the statement which you gave yesterday is intended to justify the afforestment of land in the Highlands, and the general drift of your argument is that crofting is a pernicious system, that large farming is unprofitable, and, in fact, impracticable, and that deer foresting has proved beneficial. Is that your position?—Well, that is practically what it amounts to,—that I do not think crofting or the extension of the crofting system at any rate desirable, and that I think that deer forests have been very beneficial to the Highlands.

53,083. And also that crofting has proved a very bad system—has been the bane of the Highlands?—I stated I think that it has been bad in respect of the congestion which it creates.

53,084. But you even hold that although you did enlarge the crofts it would still be a very bad system?—No, I am in favour of a certain extent of crofting remaining; I am only in favour of a reduction of it, and against an extension of it.

53,085. But you say this 'May it not be, that some 'wholesome root of enlightenment may remain, which, 'gradually spreading over the Highlands, may open 'the eyes of the Highlanders generally to the fact that 'there are other and better ambitions than a Highland 'croft can present, even if it should be enlarged at 'the expense of their neighbours, and that they are 'likely to become better men and women, more pros-'perous in a material sense, and enjoying more of the 'consideration of the world, in other spheres than in 'that of a constant and too often hopeless struggle 'with insurmountable natural impediments at home?' And then you go on to describe all the evils; so that however much you enlarge their crofts you still think it an unprofitable occupation?—I think you will find that that refers only to a portion of the crofting system being given up. In other parts of the pamphlet it will be found that I am not in favour of the whole thing being given up.

53,086. You specify the Western Highlands and speak in stronger terms than those against it. I have quoted what you say upon the general question, but when you come to the Western Seaboard you say 'It 'is too evident to every unprejudiced person that the 'system which obtains in the Western Seaboard and 'islands is one that it is most undesirable should be 'perpetuated, with all its squalid misery, its tendency 'to indolence, its chronic poverty, cheerless prospects, 'and predisposition to disease.' You will observe that when you deal with the Western Seaboard you speak in much stronger language?—Yes, that refers to perpetuating of crofting in its then condition.

53,087. When you describe crofting in those terms, of course, you look upon it as a most pernicious system. And then you say that sheep-farming has proved unprofitable and impracticable, and you go on to a justification of deer forests. The first thing that you do in justification of that system is to show that it has not injuriously affected the numbers of the people in the Highlands, which is, of course, rather a negative claim. Now, if you turn to p. 10 of that pamphlet you will find that you say regarding population 'There has been 'really no depopulation. From the earliest times of 'which we have reliable record, the numbers of the 'people in the Highlands seem to have been steadily 'advancing.' Now, if you will look at your own Table at the beginning you will see that that statement is hardly borne out by the facts. According to your own Table the population in the Highland counties never reached so low an ebb since the Census began to be taken as in 1881. Still you say that it has been steadily increasing since the earliest times of which we have reliable record. How do you reconcile the statement with the facts?—What Table are you referring to?

53,088. Table I.—Well, will you kindly look at Table II. below it.

53,089. But I am dealing with the Highlands, and in Table II. you take in the whole northern counties?—Yes, look at the same column in Table II. and you will find that what I have stated is correct.

53,090. Then this statement does not refer to the Highlands?—The counties mentioned in Table II. are Highland counties as well, some of them.

53,091. What you say is—'The population in the 'Highlands has been steadily increasing.' Now, you have Table I., referring to the Highlands, which shows that the population of 1881 was the lowest since the Census began to be taken?—That refers only to five counties, in which there was a very slight reduction in 1881 as compared with 1871; but I think in another part of the pamphlet that is admitted and the percentage of decrease is given. It is only over the whole of the northern counties that I allege an increase of population.

53,092. Yes, but you see this pamphlet is entitled 'The Population of the Highlands,' and you are speaking distinctly of the Highlands; and yet the population of the Highlands never reached so low an ebb as at the time of which you say 'That there was no depopu-'lation' and 'That the population has been steadily 'increasing?'—Well, it depends upon what you define as the Highlands.

53,093. Well, we define as the Highlands the seven counties with which we are dealing just now?—When this pamphlet was written the area of the Highlands was not defined in the way in which it is now; what we now call the crofting area was not defined at all. [Mr Sutherland.—What was the date of the pamphlet?—1884.—The Highlands were first defined in the Education Act of 1872?—Yes, but the crofting area is what Mr Maccallum speaks of.]

53,094. I point out how very misleading it is; the population in the Highlands has been steadily decreasing—the very opposite of what you state—and the population in the Highlands in the year 1891 again is still lower—it has decreased in every county with which we have to do. Take Argyll for instance and look at the decrease there during the period. The population of Argyll has decreased since the Census began to be taken from 100,973 to 75,000, or a decrease of 25·7 per cent.?—I do not want to dispute your figures; if you are confining yourself to the counties of the crofting area or to three or four counties, I admit that. But my figures were intended to apply to more counties: The crofting area as I say had not been defined at the date when that pamphlet was written.

53,095. You say at p. 9 'When the whole of the 'northern counties are considered, it will be seen that 'there has been no diminution at all, but quite the re-'verse; and if we consider by themselves the ten 'counties of Aberdeen, Argyll, Banff, Bute, Caithness, 'Forfar, Inverness, Perth, Ross and Cromarty, and 'Sutherland, in which counties alone the deer forests 'and large Highland sheep farms are placed, it will be 'found that during the past fifty years the population 'has increased by 23·3 per cent., which seems strangely 'to be always forgotten by those persons who are con-'stantly referring to depopulation of the Highlands.' You say that those who have been speaking of the depopulation of the Highlands forget that there has been an increase in Dundee, in Aberdeen, and in other large towns. Do you see the relevancy of that? You are speaking of the population of the Highlands and you say that those who speak of depopulation forget that there has been an increase in such towns as Dundee and Aberdeen. Do you not get all the increase from these large towns? You have already stated that the main object of writing this pamphlet was to defend deer forests?—That was one of the objects. My reason for going to Forfarshire and the other counties was to take the populations of the counties in which deer forests exist, and I think I was quite justified in doing that.

53,096. I quite see that; but then you see you are speaking of the Highlands, and that does not justify you in making Forfarshire a Highland county? Is it necessary for me to say again that if you take the whole of the northern counties in which you find deer forests you will get an increase, but if you take only the few counties which you are referring to, there is a certain percentage of decrease?—I admit all that.

53,097. There has been a depopulation in the Highlands although you say that the population in the Highlands has been steadily increasing?—The rural population in the Highlands has decreased no doubt as it has decreased everywhere else.

53,098. But even when you take the population of the towns the population of the Highlands has decreased and is decreasing?—In these few counties it is the fact; I have said so two or three times.

53,099. In all the Highland counties?—In all the northern counties, including all the counties in which there are deer forests, it is not the fact.

53,100. But in the Highlands they are decreasing?—Very well.

53,101. Then you bring forward your Tables to show that afforesting has not led to depopulation, and you say 'It may be noticed, that in the county of Inverness, 'which is considered the county of deer forests par 'excellence, the population has increased during the ten 'years from 1871 to 1881 by 2439, or nearly 3 per 'cent.—and this during the period when the number 'of deer forests has been considerably augmented.' Now, you take Inverness as the county of deer forests, par excellence, and I suppose you would say that the parishes in that county that would be called deer forest parishes par excellence, would be Kilmallie and Kilmonivaig?—Yes. There are others, of course; there are all the Badenoch forests and those of Laggan, and there are some in Glenelg.

53,102. But in Inverness-shire, don't you think that these include a greater proportion of forest than any other parish?—I think Inverness-shire has the larger number, 44—no, I rather think they are more in number in Ross-shire, but not in extent.

53,103. But I refer to Inverness? Now, in seeking to prove by your Tables that the deer forests have not caused depopulation, you see that you include towns in the Highlands; but let us exclude from these parishes the urban population, and you will find a great depopulation in Kilmallie and Kilmonivaig during the time you refer to. Is not that so?—I have no doubt that is correct; but is it fair to take two parishes and put them against my statement?

53,104. But you see the whole object of your Tables is to show that deer foresting does not depopulate, and I select the parishes that are deer forest parishes par excellence?—I thought everybody admitted that.

53,105. I want to get your proof, and the proof here is the Tables that you give, from which I am quoting?—These Tables were formed mainly for the purpose of showing that depopulation all over the Highlands—if there was depopulation—was no greater than the depopulation that was going on in the south.

53,106. Let me point out to you the use which you yourself make of the Tables. Take p. 23: 'A very 'frequent objection to deer forests is, that they necessi-'tate, or at least lead to, depopulation of the districts 'afforested; but with regard to all the forests which 'have been created, in recent years at all events, no 'statement could be more inaccurate than this. This 'has already been shown by reference to Tables I. and 'II.' You see the proof which you give that the deer forests have not depopulated the country lies in your Tables?—That just brings me back to the statement which I have made over and over again since you began your examination,—that if you take the few deer forest counties now embraced in the crofting area, there has been a reduction of population; but if you take the whole deer forest counties, all the northern counties and all the deer forest counties, there is no reduction of the population. So you are just back to the same point.

53,107. But your Tables do not prove what you say. They are given here, you state yourself in this pamphlet, that they are given to prove your statement, but they do not prove it?—That is your opinion. It is open to question.

53,108. Pardon me, I give your own words; 'This 'has already been shown by reference to Tables I. and 'II.'; you say that Tables I. and II. prove that deer forests have not depopulated?—Yes, and I have given an explanation of it.

53,109. But I point out to you that they do not prove that, and that if you take out the urban population, the rural population in Kilmonivaig and Kilmallie has diminished to a very great extent,—has diminished since the year 1851 by 4610.—I am not disputing that.

53,110. So that your Tables do not prove what you say here?—With the qualification which I have mentioned so often already, I admit that.

53,111. I only want you to admit that it does not at all prove what you state it does, viz., that the deer forests have not produced depopulation; that is perfectly clear and obvious. In these statistics, too, you include not only Dundee and Aberdeen and such towns, but you include, of course, the towns in the Highlands themselves; and how did these towns become formed? Are they not to a great extent composed of people who have been cleared out of the land?—No, I am not aware of that.

53,112. Are you aware, for instance, of the villages of Bowmore, Port Ellen, and Port Charlotte in Islay, and can you tell me how these were formed?—No.

53,113. You do not know?—No.

53,114. It is not within your knowledge that the people who are in these towns and villages are descendants of those who were cleared out of the land?—Cleared out of deer forests?

53,115. Oh, no, but from the land generally?—I do not know the circumstances, and I cannot speak of it at all as regards that locality.

53,116. Then, you call sheep farming by far the most important agricultural interest in the Highlands. Now, is there much agriculture on the sheep farms?—Well, the word agriculture is a general term; it means pastoral farming as well as arable cultivation.

53,117. You take it to include pastoral in this case?—Yes, as well as arable farming.

53,118. But the characteristic of sheep farming is that there is very little agriculture?—There is not much arable land upon them, comparatively.

53,119. Compared with what?—With the great arable holdings in the other parts of the counties.

53,120. Of other counties?—Of the same counties.

53,121. Now, would you call the large sheep farms a more important interest than the interests of the crofters?—Yes, I certainly should.

53,122. Are there more people engaged in sheep farming than on crofts?—I would not like to say; I have never entered into that comparison.

53,123. But don't you know perfectly well that the large sheep farmers are very few as compared with the crofters?—I know that the interests involved are very much larger in the case of sheep farmers; but as to the comparative number of people employed I cannot say.

53,124. And when you speak of the interests, do you mean the money involved?—Yes, the financial part of it.

53,125. But the crofters cultivate to a greater extent than sheep farmers, do they not?—That I cannot say.

53,126. Did you see the cultivation, for instance, in the crofts in Islay? Did you see how well they cultivate there?—They may cultivate there; but I thought the question was whether the extent of the arable land which they cultivate is greater than the extent of the arable land cultivated by the sheep farmers.

53,127. Yes, you may take it in that form?—That is a question I am not able to answer.

53,128. But still you have decided that the sheep farming industry is the greater industry?—Yes.

53,129. There have been occasions—but this you admit—where, in the creation of the large farms, many small holdings were effaced. That is one of your own statements. (See p. 11)?—There is no question about that.

53,130. So that the people have been removed in order to make these large farms. You admit that 'many small holdings and crofts were effaced.' And with regard to these farms you say that they are unlettable and unprofitable—these large farms which are composed of former small holdings?—Do you mean at the present time?

53,131. Yes, or at the time when you wrote this. You say they were unlettable and unprofitable?—Yes, that was the case with regard to a number of them.

53,132. Now, why not try to form small holdings like these again—seeing that these farms are made up of, and have effaced, former small holdings, why should it not be quite possible to try and form small holdings like these again?—I stated in answer to Mr Sutherland, that I have no objection to that, and those I represent have no objection to it, if you can do it without sacrificing the interests of other people concerned.

53,133. Let us consider, then, these interests. You find that sheep farming has become unprofitable and sheep farms unlettable. What are the very great interests, then, that have to be conserved? They are in the hands of the proprietors, who cannot let them, who cannot make a profit out of them. It should not take very much to conserve the interests of such as these?—There are two points connected with that; there is, first, the question of how, in creating small holdings, to get as much rent for them, we will say, as they still yield in the hands of the proprietor; and there is the alternative of afforestment, which certainly brings a larger rent; so that you have to consider all those interests.

53,134. You find large farms unlettable. You say, for instance, at p. 12, 'Excellent and most desirable holdings, which eight or ten years ago would have produced an embarrassment of offers, have been utterly without tenders for them; and in many cases no inquiries even have been made about them, although it was well known that landlords were prepared to make large reductions of rent.' You see that is a very strong statement to make?—Yes.

53,135. Now, you say they are excellent and desirable; excellent and desirable for what?—As sheep farms.

53,136. But excellent and desirable sheep farms would surely make desirable small holdings?—I admit that; I say it is all a question of returns and of not interfering unduly with interests which are involved besides the crofter interest.

53,137. You say these large holdings are now in the hands of the proprietors unlettable, and you wish that their liberty to turn them into deer forests should not be interfered with?—Yes.

53,138. You think that though they are excellent and desirable as farms, still the proprietor should have liberty to make them a waste wilderness?—I think it is not right to interfere, to the extent that such interference would be, with the property of other people.

53,139. Now, you also give the reason why they are unlettable and you say farms are unlettable on account of the methods of valuation of stock in the Highlands; and you say that this practice now prevails?—Yes.

53,140. Your own words are—'It is unnecessary to enter here in detail into these objectionable features of sheep valuations, some of which may, however, be briefly enumerated, such as (1) the practice, now all but universal, of mulcting a landlord of 2s. or 3s., or perhaps more, for each sheep, than a tenant would be required to pay;' and then on p. 17 you say 'To such an extent have these improprieties been carried in recent years, that, as already said, while every tenant of a farm whose lease has come to an end of late has, as may be imagined, determined to give up his farm, and take advantage of the prevailing exorbitant valuations of stock—on the other hand, deterred as they are by these valuations, no incoming tenants for these farms can be found, and landlords have had to stand in the gap, at very great personal sacrifices in some instances.' Now, these are very brave words. First of all, with regard to standing in the gap. May I ask to whom you refer when you use that martial language? Who had to be defended when the landlords had to 'stand in the gap'?—It is, perhaps, not a very happy expression that, but it is meant to show that they had to take up the situation themselves.

53,141. And they had to make 'very great personal sacrifices'; for whom were these sacrifices made?—The sacrifices of the reduction of rent are what are here referred to.

53,142. A sacrifice is generally supposed to be made for somebody else; but in this case they made the sacrifice for themselves?—I am not going to split hairs about the meaning of words.

53,143. It is not splitting hairs. You speak in praise of landlords who have 'stood in the gap,' and who have made 'great personal sacrifices,' but when these sacrifices are for themselves, where is the merit in the act?—It is not for the benefit of themselves. They have had to accept reduced rents, and they have had to borrow money perhaps.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

53,144. For whom, then, have they made the sacrifices?—'Personal losses,' I should have said, perhaps.

53,145. Now, don't you see that you have made a most serious charge against the farmers in the Highlands here when you say that the practice is almost universal of mulcting the landlords of 2s. or 3s., or perhaps more for each sheep that the tenant would be required to pay; is it not just pure fraud that you charge those valuators with?—No, it is a custom that has grown up, and I do not think the farmers themselves would seek to deny it. Many of them have told me so.

53,146. But custom will not turn a dishonest transaction into an honest one. Is there any reason why a proprietor should be charged more than a tenant when you are simply going to value stock?—None at all; I think it is very improper to do so.

53,147. And it is fraud?—Well, fraud is a very strong word to apply to a question—

53,148. But is it too strong? You see those valuators are put in a most responsible position—they are set up to value these sheep according to the best of their judgment, and they go and add 2s. or 3s. or 4s., because it is a proprietor who is buying them. Does that make the sheep any more valuable?—No, but I should be very much surprised if you were not aware that that practice does exist in your own county as well as other counties.

53,149. Well, I am sorry to hear that opinion you have expressed about the farmers. I do not agree with you that they do these things; and it is a most serious charge to bring against valuators, and one which is certainly not in accordance with my knowledge.—It is a thing that is notorious to everybody connected with sheep farming.

53,150. That where the landlords are concerned, valuators almost universally carry out a custom which amounts to a fraud?—It seems to be an understood custom, and you will find sheep farmers everywhere defending it. [The Chairman.—Do you say that farmers combine as valuers to cheat the landlord?—I do not call it cheating. Q.—But the effect of it is cheating?—It is making him pay more than he ought to pay. Everybody knows that such is the case; it has grown into a custom.]

53,151. And the landlord is defrauded, is he not?—Of course, he is made to pay more than he ought to pay.

53,152. But you see with regard to other matters, as to the extent the stock is more valuable from being on the ground and acclimatised, there may be a difference of opinion; but can there be any difference of opinion with regard to this point—charging a proprietor more than a tenant? This is not a matter of opinion at all, but must be pure fraud if it is done?—It sometimes applies to tenants as well as to landlords. I admit that tenants also are sometimes made to pay more than the proper value of the stock.

53,153. I do not doubt that valuations are sometimes too high; that is a matter of judgment. The valuators may make a mistake in judgment, but when you say that they add on 2s. or 3s. simply because the person who is giving it is a landlord, then that is not a matter of judgment—it is simply and purely a fraud?—I agree with you that it is a very wrong thing, but I have found over and over again tenants seeking to justify it. [The Chairman.—Have you yourself ever made valuations on that footing?—No, I have never been a valuer.]

53,154. Can you give me the name of any person who justified that course?—Oh, no, I beg to decline to give any names.

53,155. But can you give the name of any person who would justify such a thing as charging the proprietor more,—valuing the sheep higher because the proprietor would get them?—I have no doubt I could, but I do not want to do it.

53,156. But can you do it?—I have said so.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

53,157. You say you can, but won't. Well, you have not left much character, I must say, with the sheep farmers in the Highlands.—It is all but a recognised custom and it is not, I am sorry to say, looked upon in the light in which it ought to be. [The Chairman.—You regard it as a custom that is utterly indefensible?—Yes, I do. Q. And deserving of strong condemnation?—Yes.]

53,158. I observe that you have been recommending that the Free Church ministers should preach emigration to the people; but would it not be better that they should preach honesty to the large farmers?—I assume that they do that already.

53,159. With little effect, apparently. Then, you give Tables of prices to show that farming has become unprofitable. You have a Table with regard to wool at p. 14. You give this Table to show that farming has become unprofitable because of the decline in the price of wool, which you say is the most important item in a sheep-farmer's account. Now, what authority have you for the figures in that Table?—I got them from the published prices at the Inverness wool market, and from the various wool-brokers with whom the Highland sheep farmers deal.

53,160. You got them from a variety of sources?—Yes, I went to the wool-brokers in Leith and in Glasgow, and there is a Table of Prices published by one of the newspapers in this town, from the institution of the wool market in Inverness; and in the transactions of the Highland Society you will find such Tables from year to year.

53,161. I suppose you would accept those Tables given by the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland as authoritative with regard to the price of wool?—I really do not know; I do not know from what sources they get their information.

53,162. But you know the Society?—Yes, I am a very old member of it.

53,163. Then, would you not suppose that such an authority as that would be better than a newspaper return?—I think the sources of authority that I had were the very best possible, because they came from people who had actually bought and sold the produce.

53,164. Well, may I compare your prices with the prices given by the Highland Society, which I consider fully as good an authority as a newspaper report? You give 'prices the highest of their respective classes, 'and for stone of 24 lbs.' Now in 1883 your highest price for laid cheviot is 13s., while in the same year the Highland Society's figure is 18s. How do you account for that great difference?—I cannot account for it.

53,165. Then, what force can we attach to your Tables, seeing they differ in so great an extent as that from the Tables put forward by such a Society as the Highland and Agricultural Society?—When I say I cannot account for that difference, I remain of opinion that my figures are correct.

53,166. You say that the Highland and Agricultural Society is altogether wrong?—I say that the figures I put forward are correct.

53,167. The difference is a very material one; it is the difference between 13s. as the highest price and 18s. as the highest price. You say 'It is frequently 'remarked in these times that the sheep-farmer would 'be in a better position were he to obtain 3s. or 4s. more 'per stone for his wool, even if he should receive 6s. to '8s. less per head for his sheep than at present is going; 'and there is no doubt some truth in this, seeing that 'the revenue from wool applies always to the whole flock 'of the farm, while that from carcases in any one year 'is derived only from sheep which have arrived at 'maturity,' so that a mistake in your figures there is vital. Then I am afraid it is not a case of one solitary mistake—I turned up a few more cases, and in 1882 your figure is 15s., while the Highland Society's figure is 18s.; and in the year 1881 you have 16s., while they have 21s?—May I ask whether these figures you are quoting refer exclusively to the Highlands?

53,168. I will show you the book; there are the prices for laid cheviots given; they do not say for what, so I suppose they are for the whole of Scotland? Inverness. — George Malcolm.—That probably explains it, because there is always a difference between wool grown in the south and wool grown in the Highlands, except in Sutherland.

53,169. But you gave the highest as 13s., while they gave it as 18s.?—If you take into account cheviot wool grown in the Border counties, of course the difference must be in favour of the Highland Society's figures, for my figures refer to the Highlands alone.

53,170. But you do not state that in your paper, and are you prepared to say that there is a difference of 5s. between the cheviot wool of the Highlands and the cheviot wool of the Borders?—I beg your pardon, it states at p. 13 'It may be well to give the follow-'ing tables of average prices of the two breeds of sheep 'and the two corresponding kinds of wool which are 'raised in the Highlands for the past 23 years.'

53,171. Yes: you gave the prices of the cheviot and blackfaced because they are the two breeds raised in the Highlands, and you have stated that you got the prices from woolbrokers in Leith and Glasgow?—But you are now comparing two things which are not the same.

53,172. The Highland Society's figures may be the figures for the whole of Scotland?—Yes, and mine are the figures for the Highlands alone.

53,173. Do you think, now, that there is a difference of 5s. between the wool grown in the Highlands and the wool grown in the rest of Scotland?—Oh, yes, there may be quite that, and there is even more difference in the prices of sheep.

53,174. Then I have also looked over your prices with regard to sheep, and compared them with those given by the Highland Society; I find that you give a higher price than they give per average for the sheep. How is that?—What is the price stated in 1883?

53,175. But one question first of all. Is there laid cheviot in any other part of Scotland except the Highlands?—There is very little laid cheviot in any part of Scotland now; scarcely any; I do not know any.

53,176. But this was in 1883?—Oh, yes, there was very little else than laid cheviot at one time all over Scotland.

53,177. But you see the great difference now between this Table and yours?—Yes, but I have explained that by stating that your figures apply to the whole of Scotland, and mine to the Highlands alone.

53,178. Where, now, will the difference come in? Where was the laid cheviot that fetched 5s. more? Can you give me any idea where the laid cheviot was that fetched 5s. higher than the best of that grown in the Highlands?—Oh, no, these Tables refer to average prices.

53,179. No, it is the highest price that is given?—Well, the highest prices in one district as compared with another district.

53,180. Let us take the difference at 5s.?—I have only to say generally that the price of wool in the south is always higher than the price of wool in the Highlands with the exception of the county of Sutherland. [Mr Macleod.—Was there any laid wool in 1883 in the south of Scotland?—There is no doubt there was laid wool at the time he mentions in 1883.—Q.—Where was it?—I cannot say, but we have seen it in the market. I do not know the names of the farmers.]

53,181. Can you refer us to the sources of your figures? Are there any published records that you could give us in justification of your statistics?—I have already stated these. I got these statistics from the wool-brokers of the day.

53,182. Are there any published official statistics that we can get to justify your Tables?—There is the annual statement issued by the Inverness Courier, from the institution of the Wool Fair, I think; and now with reference to the question whether there was any laid cheviot wool in the south at that period, and any in the north, you have got it there in your book. It says it applies to the whole of Scotland.

53,183. Yes, but if it were in the north alone, it would still need to go in?—Well, as a matter of fact, I know that laid cheviot wool was grown in the south as well as in the north of Scotland at that date.

53,184. Is there any wool in the south that fetches more than Sutherland wool?—That I cannot say; I should think that cheviot Sutherland wool brings about as much as wool from any part of Scotland.

53,185. Quite so, and it is from Sutherland that the laid cheviot wool went in that year, so that there is no accounting for this difference?—Well, I think I have accounted for it by the simple fact that your figures deal with the whole of Scotland and mine only with the Highlands.

53,186. Now, you speak of the dearest wool grown from the Highlands?—No, one county only.

53,187. But it is from that county that it goes; you see that from the poor places there is no cheviot wool sent to market?—Do you mean me to infer that the cheviot wool from the Highlands goes from the county of Sutherland only?

53,188. To a great extent?—Well, I dispute that.

53,189. It does to a great extent, does it not?—I say that the Sutherland wool is more valuable; that is all I say.

53,190. So that you include in your statistics the dearest cheviot wool that is being sold, and yet you are 5s. under what I get in the Highland Society's table?—Which, in my opinion, is quite sufficiently accounted for by the fact that the cheviot wool which comes from the other Highland counties is much lower in price than cheviot wool which is grown in the south.

53,191. Is it 5s. less?—Quite. I have already said so.

53,192. Have you anything further to say about the difference between your Tables and the Highland Society's Table?—Nothing more.

53,193. And you think your explanation is quite enough?—Yes.

53,194. Your explanation is this, that the price in the Highlands is lower than it is all over Scotland?—Yes.

53,195. The Table you give states the highest price of wool?—Yes.

53,196. And you have admitted that the highest price of wool is in the Highlands?—No, I have not admitted that, except with reference to the county of Sutherland.

53,197. But it does not matter which county it is, so long as it is in the Highlands; you give the highest, and therefore if Sutherland is the highest, you must have given the Sutherland price?—Well, of course, I am giving the highest.

53,198. So that your highest should be the highest in Scotland?—The Sutherland wool I stated was, generally speaking, as high as the wool in the south, but there may be parts in the south where the wool is higher even than the Sutherland wool.

53,199. But you are going away from your explanation—your explanation fails now. The explanation which you gave was utterly fallacious, because you see you are speaking of the highest price, not of a slumping of prices. There is still that unaccountable difference between your figures and the statistics which I have before referred to. But this valuable wool comes from Sutherlandshire, from glens that have, I suppose, been cleared of old crofter population; is not that so?—Yes, certainly.

53,200. Now, you account for the collapse of sheep farming very much by the low price of wool; that, along with many other things, has been going down?—Yes; and the low price of the carcase also.

53,201. But is it not the case that the price of wool now is as high as it was when the people were cleared off the land?—That is very probably the case.

53,202. The success of sheep farming depends very much upon the price of wool, and if the price of wool is not any lower than it was when the people were cleared, and the carcase is very much higher, why should not sheep farming be as profitable now as then?—For one thing, they pay much higher rents, and their expenses are very much heavier.

53,203. I thought the rents were coming down?—Yes, that is exactly what has produced the state of matters; but the rents they were paying were so much higher.

53,204. So it is the rents that have caused the collapse—too high a rent?—That is one of the elements.

53,205. That is a very important statement to make—that it is the rents that have ruined the people and not low prices. Farming, you say, was a most successful industry on the clearing of the glens, when the prices for wool were no higher than they are now, and when the prices for the carcase were lower than they are now?—Yes, you asked me why farms could not pay now as they paid in the days of old, and I said one of the reasons was that they pay a much higher rent. But there are other considerations than rent which have led to the depression of sheep farms at present.

53,206. Yes, but you are chiefly accounting for it by the price of wool being so low; yet at the time when prices of wool were as low as now, the people were put away and the sheep farming instituted?—What I said led to the giving up of farms was that the prices which can be got now are so much less than the prices when sheep farming was in a state of prosperity. It was not a comparison between this and the state of these counties in the days before systematic sheep farming was established.

53,207. But you gave the difference as beginning with 1831. Now in 1831 the price of laid Highland wool was 7s. 6d., and in the year 1883 it was 8s. 6d.?—My Tables begin in the year 1860.

53,208. But you make reference to what caused the depopulation, and you say it began in 1831 when sheep farming was instituted, and when it became such a successful business. Then I ask you whether the price of wool was not as low then as it is now, and you admit that that is so. Then you defend deer foresting in this negative sort of way, that the afforestment of land has only an inappreciable effect upon the food supply?—Yes.

53,209. That is not much to say in its favour, but you make it inappreciable by comparing the number of sheep displaced with very large things?—Yes.

53,210. You can make anything small in that way by comparing it with a greater thing, can you not?—Surely, in a question of that kind, the proper comparison is between the whole food of that nature wanted by the country, and the food of that nature which those deer forests could produce. You can make no other comparison than that.

53,211. You give us the number of sheep displaced as established by the inquiry of 1872–73, as 400,000 at the highest estimate. That is on p. 28?—That was in the year 1872–73.

53,212. Before deer foresting became the great thing it is now. Now, do you think that the displacement of 400,000 sheep is a very small matter?—Yes. I should point out that I had nothing to do with that finding—it was the finding of a Parliamentary Committee which sat upon the Game Laws in that year.

53,213. But do you think that to displace 400,000 sheep is a small matter?—That depends entirely upon the area afforested at that time, of which no one has any record. As you know, the Napier Commission arrived at the conclusion that five acres of deer forest land are required for the keep of every single sheep. It was in that way that they arrived at their calculation of the displacement of sheep by deer forests, and it was in that way that I arrived at mine.

53,214. But do you think that that is a small sacrifice to make for deer forests—400,000 sheep?—Four hundred thousand sheep is, of course, a considerable number if you merely take the area of these deer forests.

53,215. Then, I think you make it out that that is 1·4 per cent. of the sheep stock in Scotland?—Yes.

53,216. Why should the whole of Scotland submit to 1·4 per cent. of a diminution of their stock for the sake of deer foresting?—I do not know why they submit: I suppose they find it no grievance.

53,217. Still you know the needs of this nation are year by year getting greater, are they not?—Yes.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

53,218. And is it your argument from that that it does not matter how much you afforest?—I said that the small displacement of mutton caused by deer forests can very readily be supplied from other sources, and is, as a matter of fact, now being supplied from foreign sources at a cheaper rate than it is supplied from some parts of the home country.

53,219. But when our needs are every year becoming greater and we depend so much on foreign supplies, would not the reasonable conclusion from that be that we should try to conserve as much as we can the food supply raised in our own country?—I have two observations to make about that—first, that it is in the power of the people to obtain their food wherever they choose to obtain it; and in the second place that the small displacement of sheep by deer forests is much more than counterbalanced by the advantages which deer forests provide for the Highland people especially.

53,220. We will come to the advantages again. But 1½ per cent., you know is not a small thing. Every person in Scotland has to suffer that loss, and you make it small only by spreading it out over the whole country. In the same way you might say of all the Gaelic-speaking people in the Highlands that when you compare them with the population of the whole country, their number is altogether inappreciable; but you would not say on that account that it does not matter what becomes of them?—But against that you may say that there are other industries or other concerns which are superseded upon the fact becoming apparent that they can be more readily supplied from other sources, and I say that is precisely the condition in this case.

53,221. I suppose you could get people for the Highlands also, supposing you did away with the whole Celtic race?—I cannot speak about that.

53,222. I point out that it is by comparing these things with great things that you make them appear little. You may make the Highlands little by comparing them with the whole kingdom in the same way?—This was simply a question of food supply,—and, of course, you could have no other comparison than the food supply possible from the deer forests with the food supply of the whole country.

53,223. But apart from that, would you say that the rise in price will be in exact proportion to the diminution of the supply?—The rise in price of what?

53,224. Of mutton?—No, the price of mutton has been falling rather than rising.

53,225. But, of course, if you diminish the supply, the tendency is that the price will rise, and you make out that there is a diminution of 1½ per cent.?—Yes; but by the enormous importations of foreign mutton, the price has been falling instead of rising, notwithstanding the withdrawal of these sheep from the deer forest land.

53,226. Might there not be something that would interfere with that foreign supply?—I do not think that is probable.

53,227. It may not be probable, but we can conceive, for instance, of a war occurring. Now, you have not answered my question, whether it is reasonable to suppose that the rise in price would be in exact proportion to the diminution of the supply?—No, under the circumstances of the country, I do not think it would be so.

53,228. For instance, if you reduce the whole supply by half, do you think that the price would not be much more than double; would you not have famine prices then?—No, not if that deficit could be supplied from elsewhere.

53,229. So that the price might rise much more than the diminution of the supply?—No, I have stated exactly the reverse; that the price is not likely to rise by the diminution of supply from the deer forests.

53,230. Then I see also that you defend deer foresting as a temporary expedient resorted to in order that the lands may recover their fertility. You say that that furnishes 'a sound economical reason for resorting, for a time at least, to a different system of occupation of these lands, in order that they may recover their fertility.' (p. 23). That is how you speak of deer foresting, and then you say:—'It would seem then 'quite justifiable, on economical as well as personal 'grounds, to devote these deteriorated lands at least to 'a period of use as deer forests.' You are speaking of a temporary use of them as deer forests in order that they may recover their fertility. Now, when they do recover their fertility, what do you intend to do with them?—If they can be let as sheep farms on favourable terms and not as deer forests, I should see no objection to that.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

53,231. But is it not the large sheep farms that caused the deterioration of the land?—Yes. I think you are talking of sheep farms which had deteriorated but which had recovered as deer forests.

53,232. I am asking you what you would do with the land in the deer forests when it has recovered its fertility? You say it might go back to a large holding?—Yes.

53,233. Would you put it back to that which has caused the barrenness? Why not go back to small holdings?—Yes, but if these were let as small holdings with pasturage attached, and stocked with sheep, which they certainly would have to be whoever the tenants were, would the infertility not repeat itself just as much under that system as under a system of large holdings?

53,234. But the small holder has cattle and sheep; that is always the case with the small holder?—The sheep farmers keep cattle too.

53,235. Not to the same extent as the small farmer, and is it not your view that the small holdings would be more beneficial to the land, and would keep it in a state of fertility longer than if you turned it under sheep?—No, I do not believe that, because I do not believe in a mixed stock of cattle and sheep going together on the same land.

53,236. Still they retained this fertility, and it was the pure sheep farming that brought about the infertility?—They retained their fertility, if you use that expression, because there were in the old days much fewer stock upon them than there are now. I say again what I said in the morning, that if you can let them in any form which will not involve injustice to existing interests, I really do not care how they are let.

53,237. But would you not rather prefer small holdings as being more beneficial?—I certainly should like to see a number of small farmers. I would call them small sheep farms.

53,238. And these men treated the proprietors much better in every way than the large farmers have done?—Well, I daresay we have not a great deal to thank some of the large farmers for.

53,239. You have told us that they have been cheating the proprietor?—I did not put it in so strong a form as that. I said a system had grown up which has almost obtained universal sanction now, under which when valuations took place where a landlord was concerned, he always got the worse of it.

53,240. Well, you see how differently the landlord was treated by the small holders in old times. For instance, when the estates of Lochiel were forfeited, what did the tenants do to their landlord? They paid a rent to him, did they not, as well as a rent to the Government?—Yes, I have heard that.

53,240A. In order to contrast the treatment which the proprietors got from the small holders whom they displaced for the large holders, I may just give you a quotation from Dr Clerk in his 'Memoir of Colonel 'Cameron of Fassifern,' where he says (p. 17) that on their return to their holdings after the suppression of the Rebellion of '45, 'the Government received them 'as their own tenants, exacting rent from them . . . . 'But impoverished as they were by the spoliations of 'the soldiery, they remitted a second rent regularly and 'faithfully to Lochiel in France.' How very differently they treated their landlord from the way in which he is treated by the large farmer; and yet these are the men who were removed for the large farmers. Would you not therefore try and bring back some of these faithful and honest people and replace them upon the land?—Oh, I have no hostility to that if it can be done on reasonable and just terms.

53,241. Look also to the feasibility of the thing. These small holdings will have the benefit of all the renewed fertility which has been acquired by the land as deer forest; you say it has recuperated. They would have the benefit of that, and they would not have the stock to take at valuation, so that the feasibility of forming small holdings is not so utterly hopeless?—They would not have stock to take at valuation, of course, but they would require to find a stock somewhere.

53,242. Yes, but they would not have to deal with unjust valuations; they could buy in the open market?—We heard a great deal yesterday about insuperable difficulties in the way of getting stock.

53,243. Now, one of the benefits which you say has followed deer forests has been a great increase in the rental. We have been taking evidence throughout the Highlands, but I must say that for my own part I have not been struck with this, that the rental is so very much higher than the pastoral rent, plus the old sporting rent. Take for instance, the forest of Arnisdale, which I think you know?—Yes.

53,244. Well, we have had it in evidence that immediately before it was afforested, the pastoral and the sporting rent of Arnisdale amounted to £1200, and that it is returned in the Valuation Roll now at £750. Of course, it is impossible to go into them all; but I just give you that as a simple instance of what is coming before us. Mr Birkbeck is being examined, and in answer to a question by Mr Sutherland, he says:—"Q. £1200 or thereabouts?—A. Yes. Q. And 'what is the value of it at present?—A. I am afraid not 'much. Q. Is it less than that?—A. I am afraid very 'much less. Q. So that it is actually of less value now 'than it was before?—A. I am afraid so; I am afraid 'Scotch property has gone down very much during the 'last few years.' Then, in answer to a question by myself:—'But could you not give the figure it is returned 'at in the Valuation Roll?' he says:—'Yes, certainly, 'I gave it to you as near as I could, but I have got 'the Valuation Roll here. Deer forest, £600; house, '£40, that is my residence; Macmorran's rent, £51; 'crofters' rent, £21; total, £712.' [Q.Q. 18,601–18,605, p. 437, ante]—so that the afforestment there has resulted in a reduction from £1200 to £712?—Do you wish me to answer that?

53,245. Any remark you have to make?—The explanation that I have to give is, that Arnisdale sheep farm lease expired just about that time. It was one of the older leases, and the rent was one of the large ones that were got when the lease was entered into. There are two adjoining farms of the same class, Eileanreach and Scallasaig, which also at one time commanded rents as large as Arnisdale. They fell out of lease and could not be let. One of them could not be let; the other was let to the Master of Blantyre, and the rent fell from £1200 to £400 odds; and it was considered reasonable when Arnisdale lease of the same class fell out that a proportionate reduction of the valuation should be made in that case. That accounts for the difference. The shooting rental remains the same.

53,246. No explanation does away with the fact that immediately before afforestment it is valued at £1200 and immediately upon afforestment it came down to £712. Then, if you take other forests, the Park forest for instance, there you have an instance of a forest and a sheep farm in the same place. The farmer pays £700 of a rent, and he is getting for it as a deer forest, even when he had sheep on it, £1100, showing that it is not necessary to clear land of sheep in order that you may have sport upon it. You may take these facts from me as the evidence that we had at Stornoway—that while it was a farm it was also used as a forest and paid £1100 of rent; and that now it is only put down in the Valuation Roll as £1700 or so. Of course, if we get numerous instances like that your argument about the rates fails entirely?—That may be, but it is hardly fair to quote one or two instances as ruling the whole question; if I had time to do it I could show you scores of instances which are quite the reverse.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

53,247. Then with regard to your argument about rates generally; you say, for instance, pp. 27 and 28, that in the three parishes with which you are immediately concerned the 'rates recovered from the shooting rents are to the whole rates of the parish in one 'case 19 per cent., in another 24 per cent., and in the 'third 8 per cent. These percentages, it may be added, 'do not include the values of other sporting subjects, 'such as salmon fishings, the value of which, in the first 'of these parishes, is equal to about 11 per cent. of the 'whole rental of the parish, and contributes to the rates 'in that proportion,—making 30 per cent. in all for that 'parish as the contribution of shootings and fishings to 'the rates.' Then, you draw this conclusion 'it is easy 'to see that this must greatly lighten the burden of 'taxation to every ratepayer of that parish.' Now, the other ratepayers in that favoured parish pay 70 per cent. of the rents, so that it is easy to see that they must greatly lighten the burden of taxation to every shooting tenant?—Of course, the shooting tenants share in it themselves.

53,248. But they only pay 30 per cent., while the others pay 70 per cent. What argument is that in favour of a deer forest? If deer forests paid at a higher rate than other subjects there would be some force in the argument that they lighten taxation; but where they pay only at the same rate how can it be said that they lighten the taxation of the other subjects?—The point is this; you admit that 30 per cent. goes for sporting rental; if that were absent the other ratepayers would have to make up the whole of the 100 per cent.

53,249. Quite so, but there is 70 per cent. derived from other subjects. If these subjects were done away with in the same way, the sporting tenant would have to make up the whole?—Yes.

53,250. So that it tells equally whichever way you look at it. They only bear their own share of taxation. Now, in reference to the way in which these subjects are rated, is it not the case that they are more favourably rated than any other subject in the parish? What of the houses occupied by these shooting tenants? Are they not rated at a mere fraction of their cost, while the feuars' houses in the parish are valued on their actual cost and sometimes over their actual cost?—All the rating is of course done by the Government assessor and presumably he does his duty; but I may explain that many mansion-houses throughout the Highland counties would be unlettable subjects, if they were separated from the lands or shootings attached to them, and you must take into account both subjects in considering this question. In that view the valuation put upon the most of them is I think sufficient. But this is not a question in which I have any particular interest; the work is done by the Government assessor.

53,251. I know it is done according to law. But does not the law favour these large mansions?—Not in the view that I have stated—namely, that many of these large mansions would not be lettable at all except in connection with other subjects which are certainly fully valued.

53,252. They would not be lettable because they were not built for useful purposes but for enjoyment, and these houses which were built for the enjoyment of the rich are rated at a very small percentage of their actual cost; is that the state of matters?—No, that is not the state of matters. If you take into account what goes along with the houses it is not at all the state of matters.

53,253. Take, for instance, the mansion-house of Inverlochy Castle, which cost £40,000, and is rated at £216, and which is let along with the forest. Is it not very favourably rated for the man who enjoys that house? He has put out a large capital to build that house, £40,000, and yet it is only rated at £216?—Well, so far as I know there is nothing in the state of the law to prevent the assessor raising these assessments if he sees fit, and an appeal may be taken on the one side or the other; it is open to anybody to challenge those assessments, and if an appeal is taken it comes before a committee of the County Council, which, as we all know, is now on a popular basis. Therefore, I do not see where any grievance comes in. There being a right of appeal to the Valuation Committee of the County Council, if matters remain as they are, presumably it is because everything is correct.

53,254. But the point is that the state of the law favours these houses that have been built for enjoyment?—The state of the law provides for such valuation being put upon these subjects as is considered just and fair.

53,255. These large houses now are included in the valuation of the forests?—Yes, many of them are.

53,256. And when you make up a big rental for the forests very often there has to be taken in these large houses that have cost perhaps £40,000, £60,000, or £100,000?—Those large houses and all houses have to be separately valued for other purposes than local rates or county assessments. They would not, in many cases, be entered as separate subjects at all if it were not for the necessity of assessing them for inhabited house duty and property tax.

53,257. Then, you refer to the character of the Highlanders both in the pamphlet and in the other statement which you read before us, and you certainly do not give them a flattering character?—I do not think I have decried the character of the Highlanders at all.

53,258. Do you not think you have spoken rather disparagingly of them?—No, I do not think so.

53,259. What have you left them at all? You deny then even the martial spirit?—I do not believe that there is a martial spirit amongst the Highlanders; and I honour them for it.

53,260. You do not want them to enlist in the British army?—No, I do not believe in or approve of the martial spirit at all.

53,261. That shows that you are not a Highlander—to my mind at least. Now, you show that, by saying that the people do not enlist now, and you say that there are as many people in the Highlands as there were before, and therefore there must be some other reason for their not enlisting. But are there really as many people—you have admitted already that there are not so many people in the Highland glens as there used to be?—In some parts of course there are not so many.

53,262. Take, for example, Dunoon; you include the population of Dunoon in your figures, but you do not suggest that Glasgow merchants living in Dunoon would enlist in the army?—No; I do not wonder at anybody not enlisting, because I am not in favour of maintaining standing armies at all.

53,263. You are not in favour of maintaining standing armies at all?—No.

53,264. Well, I am not going to enter into that question, but I do not know how you are going to have the food supply from foreign countries if you are not going to have an army and a navy to keep the road clear for bringing in supplies?—Probably standing armies are a necessity at present, but I think the time must come, if we believe in our Christianity at all, when we ought not to have standing armies.

53,265. But do you not think that if there is anything at all well established concerning the Highlanders' character it is this that they were a fighting race?—They were a fighting race among themselves; but I do not believe that the Highlanders ever were much given voluntarily to enlist in the army. We know the circumstances under which, as a rule, they did enlist, and I am not at all surprised that there is no disposition among Highlanders to enter the army at present.

53,266. But is not that to be accounted for by this, that the people have lost their rights in the soil—that they have been divorced from the land?—No; for the fact is, that of the Highlanders who go to the south, very few, I believe, now enlist.

53,267. Are not these the people I speak of who are divorced from the land?—Well, if a man is away from the land there is nothing to hinder him from enlisting if he chooses to do so.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

53,268. But the Highlander used to enlist in order to defend his native land—the land in which his people had a share?—I think altogether a great deal too much has been said about the Highlander's martial spirit and his desire to enter the army and to achieve the "glory" that resulted. All that, to me at any rate, is almost pure nonsense.

53,269. Well, I think if you deny the Highlander the martial spirit you may say that there is no martial spirit in the world. Is it not said of the Celtic race that they shook all empires?—If there was a martial spirit no doubt it would be shown in their enlisting, but it is not.

53,270. But are there not very good reasons why they do not enlist—that the glens are now depopulated, that they have not a home for which they should fight? Do you think that in the past they enlisted against their will?—We all know the sort of pressure that was brought to bear upon Highlanders to get them to enlist.

53,271. Is it not a wonder that people who went against their will into the army should make such good soldiers?—Oh, no, because even when you had the press-gang you never had better sailors.

53,272. You think that a love for military glory is not necessary for a soldier; you may take him against his will, and make him a good soldier?—I think that after a man has enlisted he probably gets to like the life of a soldier, and more or less of the martial spirit enters into him.

53,273. You say that they have been credited with martial spirit before their own compatriots chiefly?—Yes, I think so.

53,274. Have they not been celebrated by all the poets for their martial spirit and their martial deeds?—I do not believe in the least that that has exceeded the martial spirit in other parts of the country and in other regiments.

53,275. Have not their deeds called forth the wonder and admiration of the whole world?—Undoubtedly, and so have the deeds of other regiments of Her Majesty's army which were not connected with the Highlands.

53,276. But why should you single out the Highlander, and say that he has not the martial spirit?—I have not singled him out; it is yourself that has brought up this subject.

53,277. You say 'However this may be, it is at any 'rate not the case that Highlanders do not now enlist in 'the British Army because there are no Highlanders to 'do so; it is rather that they are not by disposition a 'fighting race in the military sense?'—Yes, all that was written eleven years ago.

53,278. Have they changed since then in disposition?—No, I still think they are not martial, and I still think they are right not to be so.

53,279. Do you not think that if you deny them the military spirit you may deny them everything?—I do not know that; I do not think a military spirit is an addition to a man's character at all.

53,280. Is it not a good thing to be a good soldier? Are not you a good soldier?—But I go behind that and say there ought to be no soldiers.

53,281. I do not think that you should deny the martial glory to the Highlander that has been so universally acknowledged?—Very well, I will concede the point.

53,282. Do you concede that they are a military people, and that you are wrong?—Oh, no, I concede that you think it is a good thing that they should be so.

53,283. That is no concession at all. I thought that you were withdrawing what you had said about them, and admitting that they are entitled to the credit that they got for military glory?—I cannot admit that I think the Highlander is imbued with a high military spirit.

53,284. Has there been any race that has shown more adaptability for military enterprise?—I cannot say.

53,285. If they are not a martial race can you point to any martial race that ever was?—I suppose every people that engage in war is more or less martial or imbued with military spirit.

53,286. Now, the soldiers that distinguished themselves so much by universal consent were drawn from glens that are now depopulated. Could you, for instance, find a regiment now in Glengarry? Could you find a regiment now in the Cameron country outside the town of Fort-William?—I should think not.

53,287. Then you say that no emancipated Highlander preaches the gospel of what is called repopulation of the Highlands by Highlanders. Do you think that that is correct? Do you think that every one who says that the Highland glens should be repopulated is unemancipated?—I have never met a single Highlander in the south at all events who would go the length of saying that these glens ought to be repopulated because they were so in the last quarter of the last century.

53,288. And what would your own gospel be if not the gospel of repopulation; is it the gospel of depopulation?—In some cases I would let the people alone, and in other cases offer them inducements to go elsewhere.

53,289. But your gospel, generally speaking, I think may fairly be taken as a gospel of depopulation?—Certainly not.

53,290. You advocate emigration upon a large scale?—Depopulation means, I suppose, removal of all the people; I do not advocate that.

53,291. Depopulation does not mean the removal of every person; there may be depopulation to a certain extent, but removal of all the people would be utter annihilation?—I only mean that in congested districts a certain number should be removed in whatever way is found best for the people themselves.

53,292. You just wish for emigration—that the people should be put away?—I have also advocated migration to other parts of the country as well as emigration. I have also recommended that some of the people should go to the busy industrial centres in other parts of the country.

53,293. Still that is depopulation of the Highlands, is it not?—But you stated that I only recommended emigration.

53,294. But you do recommend emigration, for you say 'it seems to be an indispensable preliminary to the 'successful working of any proposals for emigration on 'an extensive scale from the Highlands to such countries 'as Canada, and the United States of America, or Aus-'tralia, or New Zealand, that the people should be 'systematically and faithfully instructed in the advan-'tages they are likely to derive from such a step,' and for that purpose you would like to engage 'some of the 'more intelligent and observant pastors of the Free 'Church;' do you think that that is a scheme that would appeal to the Free Church ministers of the Highlands?—I mentioned the Free Church ministers rather than other ministers, because, as we all know, the great body of the Highland people belong to that union; but I should not have the slightest objection to some of the Established Church ministers doing the same.

53,295. You would employ them all in the same gospel?—Observe, the whole thing would be voluntary.

53,296. But that gospel is not preached by them generally—a gospel of depopulation?—Oh, no, some of them do and some do not—it is not depopulation but emigration that I mean.

53,297. Does that not mean depopulation of the Highlands?—Well, I daresay there are reasons which we need not enter upon why the Free Church ministers do not want the people to remove from the Highlands.

53,298. They have not adopted this scheme of yours to promote an extensive emigration from the Highlands?—No, unfortunately they have not.

53,299. Now, do you think there could be any other gospel for the Highlands but a gospel of repopulation, and do you think that depopulation is a gospel at all; is it not the greatest curse that can be pronounced upon any country, that it shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation?—These are not my views.

53,300. But it is your view that the population should be very much diminished, and that the land should not be so much dwelt in as it is now?—That the population should be re-distributed.

53,301. Not in the Highlands I think; to industrial centres in the south?—Yes, wherever these may be found.

53,302. Then, with regard to your statement about there being few applications for enlargement of holdings under the Crofters Act. You draw some conclusions from that. You say that from the establishment of the Crofters Commission in 1886 down to the end of 1893 only 564 applications from crofters for extensions have been lodged, while no fewer than 18,269 applications have been received for the fixing of fair rents. Now, you take no notice of the fact that these applications are not from individuals but that each of these applications involves an application from five or more persons?—Yes, that is quite the case, but I take the number of parcels of land that are applied for.

53,303. But you take no note of the fact that each application is from a body of men?—I believe it is necessary that there should be five individuals for each application.

53,304. So that the number of applications when you consider individuals was 2455?—Yes, that is quite right.

53,305. That is a much larger number than you make it?—Yes. I had in my mind the individual applications for land.

53,306. But would it not be fair to have stated this? A person who did not know the Crofters Act would be utterly misled by your figures. You see you compare that with the individual applications for fixing Fair Rents, and any person reading it would suppose that there were only 564 individuals who applied?—I do not know whether that inference would be drawn or not. It was not present to my mind when I wrote that passage, but I allude to it at another part of my statement.

53,307. You compare those corporate applications with individual applications. But there is something more than that. You use this as an argument to show that the people do not wish to migrate?—I only say that it is suggestive that they do not wish to migrate—I do not put it positively.

53,308. Why should it be even suggestive? What has that to do with migration I should like to know?—These applications were to go to other lands.

53,309. No, that is what they were not?—Well, I am aware that they must be upon the same estate or in an adjoining parish, but that in many cases would involve a removal.

53,310. The Chairman.—But you are aware surely that under the Act of Parliament the Crofters Commission have no powers of migration at all—the power of migration is not conferred upon them by the Act?—I should count that migration if they were to go into an adjoining parish.

53,311. But the Commission has no power to remove a crofter or transfer a crofter?—No; that I have explained in my statement, but it has power to give them enlargement of holdings at a distance from their present crofts.

53,312. But not to leave their holdings?—I do not know about that.

53,313. The additional holding becomes a part of the old holding, but the old holding is the principal holding?—Yes.

53,314. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Why did you conjoin the two things at all? Is it not uttterly unfair?—I think it is quite right to mention that.

53,315. To mention what is not correct? There is no connection between the two things at all, between the number of applications for enlargement and the desire of the people for migration?—I was putting it as a test whether crofters generally wanted more land or not, and I had to take those figures as showing the number of people who wanted more land. [The Chairman.—But wanting more land, arable or grazing, in addition to subsisting holdings is surely a totally different matter from congested districts and consequent migration to totally new holdings?—I admit that.—If you admit that we are agreed.]

53,316. You speak of it as if there were power under the Act to migrate and that they had failed to avail themselves of the power under the Act to migrate. You suggest 'it is probable that a consciousness of hopeless 'inability to stock and carry on new or enlarged holdings 'may have mainly induced this indifference of crofters 'to local migration; at all events, there is not sufficient 'evidence that they have been deterred by the statutory 'conditions regulating the process.' Now, Mr Malcolm, there are no statutory conditions regulating such a process?—To a great distance; I admit that.

53,317. Then, is not that statement utterly wrong as well as utterly misleading? First of all by giving the number of applications when you are supposed to give the number of individuals, you give figures that are misleading; then in saying that there are statutory conditions regulating the process of migration of which the people have not availed themselves, you state what is wrong?—I stated that 'it is probable that a con- 'sciousness of hopeless inability to stock and carry on 'new and enlarged holdings may have mainly induced 'this indifference of crofters to local migration.' Yes, I admit that.

53,318. You admit that you are wrong?—I admit that this does not refer to the present state of the law, and I have explained that in my statement.

53,319. That there is no statutory provision for migration, and therefore the people could not have shown indifference to it?—Only for enlargement of holdings; I have admitted and explained that.

53,320. Well, the number of people who have applied is far greater than the number which is stated by you. Now, really, it is utterly impossible to go over and show the fallacy of your statistics, but that I think is a fair specimen of the misleading statements that are made here. You give us an instance showing the supreme difficulty of forming new holdings out of large farms. You have had something in your mind there; you say that you have had some farm in your mind, and you showed how impossible it would be to break it into small holdings. May I ask you with regard to that farm which you say contains 160 acres arable and 360 pasture, and of which the present rent is £130,—is that farm cultivated?—Yes.

53,321. Why do you take a farm that is cultivated and show us that it would be difficult to break it up, seeing we have nothing to do with arable farms?—This was the case of a small farm rather than a croft.

53,322. How then do you think it is a subject for us to operate upon at all?—The argument may apply to farms just as well, that are let out in grass.

53,323. But the instance that you bring before us, and that you say is supremely difficult, is the case of a farm that is cultivated; what is the use of giving us a farm that is cultivated?—I contemplated a case that perhaps might come up when all this is over and your report appears; it may embrace cases of this kind as well.

53,324. You seem to be going pretty far ahead. The difficulties of the day are sufficient for us, and in the meantime we do not deal with such matters as these. But taking your own farm, do you not think there is some mismanagement in the working of that farm? You would not call that a well managed farm?—I do not know; what are the results?

53,325. Do you think the thing has been well planned? For instance, you say that the rent is £130 and the buildings have cost £1850. Do you think that is a proper proportion for the steadings?—There may have been more money spent on the buildings than was right; I am not in a position to say whether it was so or not.

53,326. Then you see when you deduct interest on the £1850 spent upon the houses there is really very little paid by the land?—But surely you would not take interest on the whole £1850?

53,327. No, but you would take £90 or so?—£80 would be more than the whole interest at 4 per cent.

53,328. At 4 per cent., but that is not surely the interest that would be sufficient upon house property?—It depends upon what bargain was come to with the existing tenant.

53,329. That shows really that such farms as you have in view pay very little for the land; that they have got great privileges in having costly houses and steadings built for them, and that the rent they pay for the land is really less than is paid by the crofter, for whom very little has been done?—Yes, but the new holdings formed out of a farm like that would have to be provided with buildings also, and the total amount of these new buildings would be even more than £1850.

53,330. That is your opinion, but you see small holdings have been formed without any outlay at all by the proprietor in the beginning. Then you say that artificial remedies had been tried which have brought no permanent relief, and this is the reason 'being economically unsound they were doomed to 'failure.' Now, can there be any more artificial remedy for the Highland question than the formation of deer forests, or can there be anything more economically unsound?—That is not my opinion; I think it is the proper use to make of that class of land.

53,331. Looking upon it from an economic point of view the land is wholly wasted; there is a great deal of labour wasted, and I am quite willing to believe with you that 'being economically unsound they are 'fore-doomed to failure?'—If that is applied to deer forests of course I do not agree with you.

53,332. Mr Macleod.—You appear here not as an individual but as a representative?—Yes, I appear rather as the secretary of the Association. Of course, my own individual views are also involved in my statement.

53,333. Were you appointed at a public meeting to appear here?—Not at a public meeting.

53,334. Have you been specifically appointed?—Yes, by the Council of the Association.

53,335. Then I think you told Mr Sutherland that the Association had no constitutional rules?—We have no printed or regularly drawn up rules.

53,336. Nor any stated meetings?—No, meetings of the Council are just held as occasion arises.

53,337. Then, might I ask if you have a list of membership?—Yes, we have a printed list of members.

53,338. Could that be put in as showing your constituency?—I have not consulted the Council about that, but I am not aware of the least objection; I think that very likely I shall be permitted to send it to you at a later date. [Mr Sutherland.—We can order it?—Very well; if you ask for it I believe it will be supplied.]*

53,339. Mr Sutherland had something to say to you with regard to the Glenquoich forest, and I would like to know a little further. Could you give us the expenditure upon the forest by the estate management since it has been converted into a deer forest; or have you given us that already?—I have given it in slump; I am sorry to say I have not the details with me.

53,340. Then the difference, as I understand it, between the old sheep farm rent and the sporting rent together, and the present deer forest rent was some £1100?—I think that is what we brought out.

53,341. You cannot tell me what capital expenditure there has been since the forest was made?—I have given the expenditure since Lord Burton went there, which is I think the date of the afforestment. It is in my local statement.

53,342. You cannot give it to me just now, can you?—I think it amounts to £224,000 for 20 years, if I recollect rightly.

53,343. How much of that would you consider to be in the shape of permanent improvements apart from the annual expenditure for upkeep?—I should think, speaking without book, that, at any rate, the half of it would be of that description during the 20 years.

53,344. In other words the return that you have got for an expenditure of something over £100,000 is £1100 a year?—But that is not expended by the estate, it is expended by the lessee.

53,345. I was speaking rather of the estate management. The question I ask you is what expenditure has there been by the estate management on Glenquoich since it was converted into a deer forest?—The estate has spent very little indeed on Glenquoich; it has been all done by the lessee.

53,346. Is that a common thing?—Yes, there are a number of cases of that sort in the Highlands.

53,347. But you would not say that it was a common thing?—It is not the general case, I would suppose.

53,348. I would wish you to be perfectly frank; I am not pressing you in any way, but do you think it reasonable for us to be asked to believe that in the case of shootings or deer forests which are let on very short leases, the lessees would be prepared to make any large capital expenditure?—No, when they are let on very short leases the lessee cannot be expected to do so, and, as a matter of fact, it is not often done.

53,349. And, as a matter of fact, the great majority of forests are let on short leases?—I cannot say positively, but I should think most of them are let on leases not exceeding five or seven years.

53,350. Can you give us the expenditure, be it large or small, by the estate management on the Glenquoich portion of the property since it was converted into a deer forest?—No, it probably amounts to no more than a thousand or two, but I have not the particulars with me.

53,351. Of course, you will confess that in order to make a fair comparison it is essential to take into account what has been spent in that way in making it a deer forest?—Yes.

53,352. Do you think you could supply us with the information?—I can at a later stage, after I go home, if you wish it.

53,353. Very good?—Thank you.

53,354. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You were asked a question as representing the proprietors of the Highlands as to their views on the subject of our inquiry. I should like to ask you this question; if a scheme could be framed involving no injustice to the proprietors on the one hand or crofters on the other, would those whom you represent look favourably on the scheme to increase the number of small holdings?—I should think so, certainly; I think they would be only too delighted if we could come to an agreement on such a basis.

53,355. The Chairman.—You say, I think in your report, that Lord Napier's Commission was a very strong Commission?—Yes.

53,356. And their report is one which has carried much weight with it in the opinion of most men?—Yes, that is my idea of it.

53,357. Now, you say of Lord Napier's Report that it is 'loaded with and marred by a vast quantity of 'unveracious and worthless matter.' I take it that as you are representing the landlords in making your statement you represent Lochiel?—Lochiel read the statement some time before it came before you.

53,358. Then, we have it from you as a responsible witness that Lochiel is of opinion that that Report which he signed is 'loaded with and marred by a vast 'quantity of unveracious and worthless matter'?—Yes, but there I refer not to the evidence that was taken by the Commission, but to a great many statements which were sent in by parties.

53,359. No, it is Lord Napier's Report you are speaking of?—Yes, but I referred to these Appendices to the Report. What we generally call the Report is in the first volume, and ends with the signatures of the various Commissioners.

53,360. And that is what you refer to?—Oh, no, I do not refer to that. I refer to some other matter which appears in the later volumes.

53,361. Do you not refer to the statement submitted to the then Government of Her Majesty, and signed by the Commissioners?—No, I do not refer to that.

53,362. Then, why do you not say so?—Perhaps I ought to have specially said so.

53,363. You do not say 'Minutes of Evidence;' you say 'The Report.' Now, the Minutes of Evidence and the documents that were printed with them are appendices to the Report; but the Report by the Commission is the special statement which the Commissioners make setting forth the conclusions at which they have arrived based upon the evidence?—I daresay I ought to have been more explicit at that place.

53,364. Now, you say that the Act (you mean the Act of 1886) has failed because it has omitted to give effect to some of Lord Napier's recommendations. To which recommendations in particular do you refer?—Do I say that it has failed? I do not recollect having said that; I said that some recommendations in the Napier Report were not carried out in the Act.

53,365. What recommendations made by that Commission would, if carried out, have made the Act in your judgment a success?—There was an improving lease recommended instead of fixity of tenure.

53,366. Here is the sentence, 'that it has not done 'so'; that is to say that the Act has not succeeded 'is 'now known to everybody. The existence of this 'honourable Commission,' that is the Commission now sitting, 'is conclusive proof of it, and there is a strong 'probability that this failure is mainly due to the omis- 'sion to give effect in the Crofters Act of 1886 to some 'of the strongly enforced recommendations of the very 'strong Commission who reported in 1884.' Now, to what recommendations do you refer?—One was that there should be an improving lease rather than fixity of tenure.

53,367. Do you think that has led to the failure of the Act?—That is one of the elements.

53,368. Do you mean by an improving lease security of tenure?—I mean the improving lease which Lord Napier elaborately recommended in the report.

53,369. But is there not ground for the conclusion that the improving lease given by the Act itself and the security of tenure connected with it is better than an improving lease by way of private contract?—These Commissioners state the reverse.

53,370. Then, do you say, speaking as a responsible and experienced man, that that is one cause of the failure of the Act?—That is one of the elements.

53,371. The absence of provisions for improving leases and the presence of a provision for security of tenure?—Yes, I think that Lord Napier and the others were all against fixity of tenure.

53,372. But I would like to get from you how you reach the conclusion that the Act would have succeeded had there been improving leases, and has failed because of the statutory security?—We believe that would have been the case.

53,373. Tell me why?—It might have failed after all even if that had been done.

53,374. On what logical statement do you base the conclusion that that would have been the result?—Simply that we think an improving lease would have been a better expedient.

53,375. I quite follow that, but what I want to get you to tell us, if you are in a position to do so, is this; why would an improving lease have succeeded where statutory security has failed?—Because the tenants would have had opportunities of starting on fresh ground, and there would have been no difficulty probably in providing ground for them in that case.

53,376. Started on fresh ground; do you mean got new holdings?—Got new holdings to improve.

53,377. And how would the buildings have been provided?—That was, I think, set forth in Lord Napier's Report also.

53,378. But what is your view?—The view is that the tenants themselves would have to find the money somewhere.

53,379. And the stock?—And the stock.

53,380. And to undergo such privations as necessarily accompany transference to new ground requiring a certain amount of reclamation and cultivation?—Of course, the old tenants would remain in their old holdings; it would only be tenants of the new holdings who would require to provide new buildings.

53,381. But I thought you pointed at the old tenants getting new holdings?—Some of the old tenants might go; but I thought rather of the taking of so many of the tenants out of the congested districts and putting them on new ground.

53,382. Then, your view is that if that course had been pursued, so far as that goes the Act would have been more successful?—I think so.

53,383. You are aware that on the statutory security of tenure very great improvement has taken place on crofters' holdings in certain districts?—I have heard of new houses being erected in several districts.

53,384. You heard the passage which Mr Sutherland quoted from Mr Roger Macneil, M.B., Medical Officer of Health for the county of Argyll, p. 33 of his third annual report, to the effect that a great improvement had been carried out in the dwelling-houses in the island of Tiree. 'During the past three years 'about thirty houses have been almost entirely re-'built. This has been voluntarily done by the crofters, 'cottars, and others, on the strength of the security 'afforded under the Crofters Act?'—I should not consider thirty a very great number.

53,385. In Tiree?—Since the passing of the Crofters Act.

53,386. In Tiree?—I should think not.

53,387. The Act was passed in 1886, and this report is dated 1893; but he speaks of a period of three years; that is on an average ten new houses in a year in one island?—Yes.

53,388. One of the smaller outer islands?—Well, I am very glad to hear that.

53,389. Then, you are also aware, I daresay, that there has been an enormous building of new houses in certain other quarters—in certain districts of Sutherlandshire, for instance?—I do not know about Sutherland; I have heard that in Skye some forty to fifty houses have been erected since the passing of the Act.

53,390. So that this statutory security of tenure has, to a considerable extent, led to improvement of the holdings, and an improvement of the crofters' buildings?—Oh, yes, but I should suppose that some of that would have gone on in any case.

53,391. But, having regard to that, are you not of opinion that the Act has so far at least been attended with success?—It has in that direction no doubt, to a certain extent.

53,392. What other recommendation made by Lord Napier's report has not been adopted, which, if adopted, would have led to the success of the Act?—There was some provision for the purchase of crofts.

53,393. By whom?—By the tenants if they could find the money.

53,394. Where is that mentioned in the report?—I think you will find it upon pp. 41 and 42.

53,395. And you suggest that as a cause of the failure of the Act?—I say it is a recommendation which was passed over when the Act was passed.

53,396. No doubt; but observe your words that the Act had 'failed because it had omitted to give effect 'to some of Lord Napier's recommendations.'—Well, I should say that the Act would have been more successful had there been provision for the purchase of crofts in cases where that was feasible.

53,397. But the words of your statement are that he Act had failed because of its omission to give effect to these recommendations?—I rather think that I stated that the failure of the Act was in finality.

53,398. I shall read the passage again: 'this failure 'is mainly due to the omission to give effect in the 'Crofters Act of 1886 to some of the strongly en-'forced recommendations of the very strong Commission 'who reported in 1884.' To put it briefly, do you now adhere to that statement?—Yes, I do with some additional explanations. Further on in that passage which you have read it is stated 'the authors of these 'recommendations were much more likely to be right 'than the originators of that irresponsible advice which 'has so conspicuously failed in that utility and finality, 'which Sir George Trevelyan so much desiderated in '1886 and is again unfortunately in search of.'

53,399. But whom do you mean by the 'originators 'of irresponsible advice'?—I really do not know who they were.

53,400. But to whom do you refer?—The advisers of Sir George Trevelyan.

53,401. Who was badly advised?—I think he might have been better advised.

53,402. He was in the hands of dangerous men who gave him bad advice, and he put that advice into a Bill which the legislature made an Act. Is that what you mean?—I do not say dangerous men.

53,403. What exactly do you mean?—I mean men who were probably not fully qualified to give him the best advice.

53,404. Then, Sir George Trevelyan was misled by bad advice, and being misled he misled the legislature. Is that what you mean?—I say he might have got better advice on certain points.

53,405. By going to whom?—By going perhaps to people in the counties concerned who knew the circumstances of the counties fully.

53,406. But, at any rate, however it came about, that Bill became law by too much attention being paid to bad advice?—Yes.

53,407. Now, in connection with that, you are aware that the Bill passed the Lords as well as the Commons, and was discussed in committee particularly by the late Lord Abinger, the Duke of Argyll, and several other noble lords who took a special interest in this question? Were they the victims of bad advice?—I do not know the opinions of some of the gentlemen you have named, but I know the opinions of the late Lord Abinger, at any rate, were not in favour of the Act as it now stands.

53,408. Yes, but his proposals were not given effect to by the House of Lords?—No.

53,409. Now, would you tell me where is the land to be got for improving leases if there is no land available?—The land would have to be got, of course, out of sheep farms or deer forests.

53,410. There would have been land in that case, suitable for new holdings under improving leases?—Yes, if the circumstances of the improving leases were such as could be carried out without injustice to other interests, as I have said.

53,411. And, of course, you are assuming that this injustice would have been avoided if such improving leases had been authorised by the Act, and the matter in fact, left in the hands of the landlord?—I should have expected so on the lines which are set forth in Lord Napier's report.

53,412. Now, are you of opinion that had the Act left the matter in the form of improving leases to be carried out by the landlords making such contracts as they were advised with the tenants, that would have worked a material improvement in the condition of the crofters?—They were not to be entirely carried out by the landlords; the conditions under which improving leases were to be granted were detailed by Lord Napier in the report.

53,413. But it would have been a matter of contract between the landlord and the tenant?—To a certain extent it would.

53,414. To what extent would it not?—The tenants were to be entitled (so many of them upon a representation) to go to the landlord and say that they wanted land for an improving lease.

53,415. And it lay with the landlord to grant the lease?—And unless the landlord could show good reasons to the contrary they would be entitled to have it.

53,416. Through what agency?—An agency would be provided no doubt.

53,417. Some Commission?—Some Commission.

53,418. In fact, it would have been a Crofters Commission for the granting of improving leases instead of a Crofters Commission for the fixing of fair rents?—Yes, and for any other work to be done under the Act.

53,419. Then, is this your objection, that the Act failed because it provided wrong machinery?—Not wrong machinery, but failed to take hold of the proper material for providing it.

53,420. You think, in short, that the Act took away too much from the landlord's position as owner of the land in the matter of rents, arrears, and enlargements?—Yes, and chiefly in conferring fixity of tenure.

53,421. Do you say, as a matter of deliberate opinion, that if these things had been left much more in the hands of the proprietor than they were by the Crofters Act of 1886, the condition of the crofter to-day would have been better than it is under the Act of Parliament?—I should think so; if the well-advised, well-thought-out means of the Napier Commission Report had been given effect to.

53,422. Now, tell me on this matter of improving leases,—since the Act passed have there been any improving leases granted on the Invergarry estate?—No, I expect that what the Act has done is to put an end to improving leases.

53,423. Why?—Because of fixity of tenure. There is no occasion for giving an improving lease if a man has fixity of tenure on his croft.

53,424. He may get another holding, a new piece of ground altogether on an improving lease, which would not be under the Act at all?—It is quite open to give improving leases outside the Act.

53,425. Would you try that experiment?—No, we have no people wanting more land.

53,426. Now, you say with regard to the matter of arrears that,—while I quite agree you make no personal observations with regard to the Act, you say the provisions as to arrears are open to abuse and have opened a door for crofters evading their just engagements which they were well able to fulfil. To what particular townships do you refer, or to what particular quarter?—I refer to the lists of people who made application to have their arrears cancelled as set forth in the Crofters Commission Report.

53,427. And do you say that they used the position which the Act gave them to avoid discharge of their obligations to pay rent and arrears?—I am afraid that is so in the case of some of them.

53,428. Do you make that as an observation having much general application, or only applicable to a restricted area?—I do not know how far it applies over the whole of the crofter area.

53,429. Has it any application to Invergarry?—No, because there were no applications from there.

53,430. Has it any application to any estate over which you have an oversight?—No.

53,431. Has it any application to any other estate of which you have personal knowledge and experience?—I am afraid it has; but I should be sorry to have to name the estates.

53,432. It is a remark, then, only applied to one estate?—No, to a number of estates.

53,433. But to one estate in your own personal knowledge?—No, more than one.

53,434. Now, you say that the arithmetical question of the extent of land suitable for the crofting industry is the main point for elucidation; but you go on to add that you do not enter upon that subject—you do not propose here to enter into large details upon that subject—but is not that the main thing we have to consider?—Yes; but, after all, I have considered it at a later stage of the paper.

53,435. You go on to say the quantity of arable land in sheep farms has not been accurately ascertained, and with regard to deer forests, 'the total arable area of 'all the deer forests would not suffice for the provision 'of 400 crofts.' But while you make that calculation—whether it is right or wrong—in regard to deer forests, you give us no similar calculation in regard to grazing farms?—Yes, I give an estimate in that case also at p. 25.

53,436. You tell us the total land and the pasture and the arable, but you do not tell us how many crofts might be made out of that land?—No, because that depends entirely on what the size of the crofts would be in respect of arable land.

53,437. But you see you mention 400 crofts in deer forests; was there anything to prevent you making a similar estimate with regard to grazing farms?—If the quantity of land had been so well assured in the case of sheep farms as I believe it to be in the case of deer forests, then I should have done so with safety; but I stated over and over again that no one has thoroughly ascertained what extent of arable land there is in sheep farms.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

53,438. You have given precise figures of the area of sheep farms—total area 3,119,959 acres; pasture, 3,112,303 acres; arable, 7656 acres; had you not the same materials for calculating the number of possible crofts that you had in making the similar calculation as regards the deer forests?—Quite so, if I could have assumed that that was correct—it was a mere estimate.

53,439. But you might have assumed it as correct for the purposes of calculation?—I might.

53,440. Then, did you not make the calculation because these figures are inaccurate?—I did not make the calculation because I went on to explain that it would be quite impossible to withdraw all that land from the sheep farms.

53,441. But it is equally impossible in your view to withdraw land from deer forests. Would it not have been just as easy for you to give us a calculation of the number of possible crofts upon grazing farms as upon deer forests with the figures you have?—Quite possible, upon these figures.

53,442. Taking these figures, how many crofts could be put upon the grazing farms?—At the same rate of apportionment of arable land there would be 765 crofts; but that is taking everything.

53,443. That is between 1100 and 1200 crofts altogether?—Observe, that is if you took possession of all the arable land that exists.

53,444. You mean all the old arable?—All that exists of any kind.

53,445. Not the land in rotation, but the old arable?—All kinds.

53,446. Now, is it not beyond doubt that on the grazing farm—I am not dealing with the question of material damage or the question of buildings, but is it not the fact that on the grazing farms there are considerable tracts of land available for the formation of new crofters' holdings?—Undoubtedly.

53,447. And the formation of such crofters' holdings, of varying sizes no doubt, if carried out and occupied by crofters or cottars who are at present in congested districts, would operate a vast relief to the crofting area?—Yes, at the cost of the destruction of the rest of the farm.

53,448. That may be. Now, you make a statement which I think is of considerable importance, and I should not like it to pass unnoticed. I do not say that I am differing from you. You say that rarely could crofters be set down in townships or groups. There are districts, are there not, where they could easily be set down in townships or groups?—Yes, but I say they could not be successfully set down because of the difficulties which I detail.

53,449. You know Strathnaver, I daresay?—I do not know it very well.

53,450. Have you seen it?—I have been only at the head of it.

53,451. That is a pity; it is a vast tract of gently sloping land running for a distance of something like 13 or 14 miles on each side of the river Naver; at one time thickly peopled, perhaps too thickly peopled with crofters and small tenants. Now, could you not have a number of townships or groups there?—Of course, there are places where you could put them, there is no doubt about that, but I referred to districts where the arable ground available was so limited that you could not put them in townships; and I also explained what the difficulties would be in connection with the formation of roads and the providing of schools and such like.

53,452. That is no doubt a practical question which may have to be considered afterwards; but take the county of Caithness—I do not know that there are any townships away from the fishing townships on the seashore; might you not in the grazing farms of that county manage to form a considerable number of new holdings such as at present exist?—You could always form a township where you could get sufficient arable land around it.

53,453. And you are aware, no doubt, that in Caithness there are a number of farms from which such holdings could be made without having common pasture?—Yes; again I say at the expense of the rest of the farm.

53,454. That, of course, is a matter we need not enter upon at present. Now, let me ask you one question about the rainfall. Would you kindly look at the map in your paper. I think you will find there a red colour and a speckled red colour?—Yes.

53,455. The red colour shows an annual rainfall of 30 to 40 inches?—Yes.

53,456. And the speckled or half-red, half-white colour shows a rainfall of 25 to 30 inches?—Yes.

53,457. While the area which shows a rainfall about 80 inches is very much smaller than either of the other two?—Yes.

53,458. So that that map proves that the proportion of the crofting area where the rainfall exceeds 80 inches per annum is only a fraction of the whole?—Excuse me, I thought you referred to the red colours all over the country. If you take the colours within the crofting area only, I think the dark blue colour greatly predominates.

53,459. In the crofting area?—Yes. That is my very reason for producing this map.

53,460. Of course, if that is so, that is an answer to my question. Now, you gave us an account of charge and discharge, an account of receipts and expenditure, and we have from Cameron of Lochiel an account of receipts and expenditure at p. 133 of his Memorandum, which he corrected so far by saying that wedder lambs should be 50 at 8s. instead of 50 at 12s.; ewe lambs 12 at 10s. instead of 12 at 14s.; stirks £4 each instead of £6 each—but your account of receipts and expenditure does not quite agree with his own. I do not at this hour of the day propose to go into the different items; but which of these two accounts of receipts and expenditure shall we take as the more reliable?—Well, I consider my own more reliable.

53,461. Then, we are to cast aside Lochiel's and take yours?—It is a matter of opinion.

53,462. But your opinion is that yours is the better of the two?—Yes.

53,463. You consider yourself a better authority than he is on that matter?—I give my opinion here for what it is worth.

53,464. Now, I want to ask you a question or two about these deer forests. You say that the total number of deer forests is 130?—Yes, according to the return.

53,465. Now, of these deer forests 20 existed from time immemorial?—Yes.

53,466. Fifty-nine existed prior to 1872 and 13 have been created between 1872 and 1883; that is, at the rate of very nearly three forests a year. Between 1883 and 1891, 21 additional deer forests have been made?—That is all correct, I believe.

53,467. Now, can you tell me the area afforested since 1891?—No, my lord, I cannot.

53,468. Are you aware of some afforestment in process of being made just now—for example, have you heard of any afforestment being carried out at present on Sir Allan Mackenzie's estate at Kintail?—Yes, I heard quite lately that it is in contemplation to do so.

53,469. That the sheep stock are advertised for public sale, and that the expectation in the district is that that land will be afforested?—That has been announced for years past, and, I suppose, it is actually going to take place now.

53,470. That is your belief?—I have heard so.

53,471. Then, are you also aware that the sheep stock has recently been cleared from the farm of Comar?—Yes, that was done I think in the spring of this year.

53,472. Last year or this year—and it is proposed to afforest this land?—Yes, I know that.

53,473. Then, you are also aware, I daresay, or you may have heard, that proceedings are going on with a view to the afforestment in Sutherlandshire of the farm of Achmore?—No, I have not heard of that case.

Inverness. — George Malcolm.

53,474. So that there is a process of afforestment we may take it, I think, going on at this very moment?—Yes, there are these cases certainly.

53,475. Following upon the number of cases which you place between 1872 and 1883, and the further number which have occurred since 1883?—Yes.

53,476. All that, I think you will admit, is directly in the teeth of the opinion conveyed on p. 94 of Lord Napier's Report, that a provision should be framed by which the areas which might hereafter form the most appropriate scene for expanding cultivation of small holdings should be preserved from curtailment?—He goes on to say that no afforestment should take place below a certain altitude, which is the 'appropriate scene' he had in view, no doubt.

53,477. But before he states that, he adds to the sentence I have read, 'If this were done, the interests 'of the class for whom we are specially concerned would 'be effectually secured.' The absence of this provision, therefore, in the subsequent legislation seems to have had the effect of imperilling the interests of those (the crofters mainly) with whom this Report of Lord Napier deals?—Yes, if we assume that the crofters could be provided with holdings out of those lands that have been afforested.

53,478. But that is the assumption upon which Lord Napier's advice to the Government proceeds?—Yes, but we have had a great deal of evidence as to the difficulty of doing it.

53,479. Don't you think, then, that it would have been a much wiser thing for those who have been afforesting lands since 1883 to have given heed to this suggestion of a very strong Commission, a Commission of landlords?—I do not see how the landlords can be blamed for doing it, seeing they would have lost so much of their incomes if they had held these places as sheep farms, probably in their own hands, without being able to let them.

53,480. You heard Lochiel's statement that he was against afforestment which would outrage public opinion?—Yes, so am I, on any occasion.

53,481. Don't you think that any afforestment which has taken place since 1883 has been an outrage on public opinion?—No, I do not go the length of saying that.

53,482. Don't you think it has been unwise and imprudent, and not in the ultimate interests of the landlords themselves?—I would say it would be most inadvisable to do so if it could be avoided, without inflicting great loss on the proprietors.

53,483. I desire to refer specially to one of the Commissioners in that Report, viz., Sir Kenneth Mackenzie. The area of his afforested land when the Commission gave its Report was 42,750 acres, and the area of his afforested land at this moment remains exactly the same, so that he has not, so far as this return shows, afforested an inch of land since he signed the Report?—But probably Sir Kenneth was not placed in any difficulty of that kind. There are many others in that position.

53,484. I cannot tell you as to that. Now, you say that the area of the 109 forests is 1,955,209 acres; and the area of the 130 forests is 2,552,383; the difference is 597,174 acres, or shall we say in round numbers, 600,000 acres. But, then, you go on to say that there is grave reason to suspect many inaccuracies in the return of 1891. Are we not to take it that between 1872 and 1883 there has been an increase of 600,000 acres of afforested land?—Between 1883 and 1891 you mean. I myself doubt it, but we are obliged to accept the return as correct.

53,485. That Return you know was prepared by a very well known and eminent man in his own department, and was prepared, I suppose we may take it, upon information received from the owners of the land?—Yes.

53,486. Do you now, as representing the owners of land, say to us that this is an inaccurate return?—I do.

53,487. Then, either the owners of land gave in statements with regard to the area afforested which they knew to be incorrect, or statements which they did not take sufficient trouble to verify?—I believe the latter occurred.

53,488. Could you give us any idea to what extent that inaccuracy goes?—Yes, I have read it several times already.

53,489. You say that this return may be suspected of many inaccuracies—can you make up for us a statement which will be accurate?—I think if the same course had been followed in 1891 as was followed in 1883, we would then have had a perfectly accurate Return.

53,490. What course was that?—The Commission of that day called upon the proprietors to furnish plans or maps of the deer forests with the boundaries clearly shown upon them; they submitted these to experts to be measured; and by this means they checked the figures which had previously been given to them.

53,491. But the inaccuracy here, in your judgment is, I take it, in the direction of an excessive statement of afforested land?—Yes; but there are several other features of the Return, besides the acreage, which are not correct.

53,492. And not creditable, in fact?—No, I think it is a bad piece of work.

53,493. I leave you to settle that question with the Crown Agent of 1891. Now, you gave us some rather important statements with regard to the question of forestry. You say that 905,759 acres, or a third of the whole land under timber, is in the Highland counties?—Yes.

53,494. And you say that of that there is in Inverness-shire 168,738 acres, which is greater in area than all other crops?—Yes.

53,495. The tree crop in Inverness is the largest of all the crops?—Yes.

53,496. That would suggest, therefore, the feasibility and the desirability of extending forests in many directions?—I am quite in favour of that.

53,497. How would you propose that it should be carried out; because I must invite your attention to this, that notwithstanding opportunities existing in the past for growing trees, these do not seem to have been grown so largely as they might have been by the landlords themselves. I think I am correct in saying that, except the Atholl estate in Perthshire and the Seafield estate in Inverness-shire, and I suppose your estate of Invergarry also, tree growing has not been carried on nearly so largely as it might have been?—I give reasons for it in this statement. The chief reason is, that the climate on the west coast will not allow you to grow trees to nearly the same altitude as in the midlands or on the east coast.

53,498. But I gather from you that successful tree growing might be carried on in the Highland counties to a much further point than it has been?—I say that there are still bits along the straths and sea coast where trees might be grown with advantage.

53,499. And you would be in favour of that mode of using the land being carried much further than it is?—Oh, yes, as far as it is suitable, and without, of course, destroying any more important interest.

53,500. Now, how do you propose that this should be done—that an impulse should be given to the growing of trees?—Do you mean how the expense of it should be overcome?

53,501. Everything about it. How do you propose that the enterprise should receive an impetus?—If it could be shown capable of being a commercial success, I suppose proprietors would find the means of doing it themselves; but in all cases where they were not satisfied that it would be a commercial success, of course they would not do it.

53,502. You do not suggest any assistance from Government in that direction?—No.

53,503. Now, you submitted to our consideration a concrete proposal, which was this; the acquisition by purchase of one or more of the Hebridean Islands, the expropriation of the landlord or landlords, and the planting of crofters there?—I recommended that as an experiment, at least, before anything on a much larger scale should be entered upon.

53,504. You do not mention the island that you referred to?—No, but I suppose either the island of Lewis or Skye might be obtained.

53,505. Have you been in the island of Lewis?—I have not been in the island of Lewis, I think.

53,506. You have never been on it?—I think not.

53,507. Are you aware that the island of Lewis is the very worst place in the world for an experiment of that kind?—I am aware that it is the most crying place for such an experiment; there is the most crying necessity for the redistribution of the people there.

53,508. Do you know the quality of the land, speaking generally?—Yes, I know it of course from other sources.

53,509. You know that it consists to a large extent of peat hags and absolutely waste land hardly worth a penny an acre?—I have heard a great deal about the excellent land that is in the sheep farms and deer forest there.

53,509A. But there are very few sheep farms altogether?—But all that land would of course be thrown into the general subject.

53,510. The north part of the island of Lewis is in the hands of crofters already?—Yes.

53,511. There the farms are the exception and the crofting area is the rule; this is the last place in the world where such an experiment should be tried with any hope of success. Don't you think it would be better to try such an experiment upon good land?—Wherever the land can be got; but it ought to be in the neighbourhood of, or not far from, a congested district.

53,512. Yes, but ought it not to be land regarding which experts entertain the opinion that it affords a reasonable prospect of profitable cultivation?—Certainly, you ought to have the best land you can get.

53,513. I hope you really do not seriously mean that such an experiment should be tried in the Lews, because we can all predict failure in that case?—I have not named the Lews or any other place; but many people have thought of it.

53,514. Don't you think that so far from going to a congested area like the Lews, it would be better to go to a unoccupied area with good land, where there would be room to put people with some hope of success?—Yes, I have stated that, if you could get the people to go to a great distance.

53,515. We cannot get them to go till we get a place to put them. Now, Mr Malcolm, we have kept you a very long time I must say, but if there is anything you would like to add to what has already been elicited, we shall be glad to hear it?—No, my lord, so much has been said that I really cannot recollect at this moment anything that has been omitted.

53,516. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—With regard to the disputed military spirit of the Highlanders, I should like to ask you this; are you aware that the late Edward Ellice of Glengarry stated before a Game Law Committee of the House of Commons in 1873, that the district of Glengarry sent to Prince Charlie's army a soldier for every pound of rent on the estate?—I suppose Mr Ellice said so; at least, I have heard it so often that it is perfectly familiar to me.

53,517. Is it not possible for you then to believe the statement which the editor of the Scottish Highlander made in his paper, and which you disputed, that 600 clansmen followed the chief at the battle of Culloden?—I do not dispute, and have not disputed, that that number of men may have gone with their chief.

53,518. And is it not a fact, within your knowledge, that the Highland regiments have always been put to the front in our great foreign wars?—I do not know whether that is the case or not.

53,519. I have been told that in your statement you used the words 'hired agitators'; I did not hear it myself, but I am led to understand that the phrase occurred?—I do not remember using that expression; I alluded to the Crofter agitation, no doubt, several times.

53,520. The reason I ask you is, that I have myself been asked whether I was a paid agent. Is it a fact that you are to-day a hired agent of the landlord party?—No, I am not.

53,521. Are you, as secretary of the Highland Property Association, paid for your services?—There is no salary attached to the office; at least there is no fixed salary.

53,522. But have you been remunerated by the Association for your services?—Yes, I have at intervals got some remuneration for my services.

53,523. And do you consider it contemptible or dishonest that men who act as agents for the people should be remunerated, while you believe it is quite the correct thing that the agent of the landlords should be paid?—I never said a word against the agitators being paid.

53,524. You expressed a desire that emigration should be conducted on a large scale, and that it would be very desirable that the Free Church ministers should preach emigration with the view of getting the people to go?—That was a suggestion I made in 1883; it is not repeated in this document.

53,525. Is it within your knowledge that the Free Church General Assembly was held in the capital of the Highlands, in Inverness here, three or four years ago, and that the Free Church in its supreme court unanimously passed a Resolution which was to Petition Parliament to devise ways and means for sending the Highland people back to the straths and glens?—I suppose that is correct; I do not know; but I quite admit that Free Church ministers are not at present furthering emigration.

53,526. But this to your knowledge is the act of the whole body of the Free Church?—I take it from you: I do not know about it myself.

53,527. It was carried unanimously. Now, that being so, do you not now despair and give up all hope of seeing the Free Church ministers of the Highlands making crusades with the view of getting the Highland people to emigrate?—No.

53,528. You still hold that they will cast aside the Resolution at which they arrived in General Assembly at Inverness?—I hope some of them will some day.

53,529. Now, with regard to the question of improving leases; we heard from yourself yesterday that there are 67 tenants in Glengarry, 18 of whom are crofters within the meaning of the Crofters Act; and 49 may be described as small tenants; and I think you said that of the 49 about one-half have potato ground, that being all the extent of their holding, and that the other half have none. Now, seeing that the improving lease you spoke about is in your opinion very admirable, did you give the benefit of an improving lease to any of the 49 small tenants who are outside the scope of the Crofters Act?—Your question has no application, in face of the fact that not a single person in Glengarry has asked for more land.

53,530. I am not speaking about an application for more land at all. You said that there were 49 small tenants on the estate who are outside the benefits of the Crofters Act, and you say that you could not give the benefit of the improving lease to crofters because of the Crofters Act. Was there anything to prevent your giving the benefit of an improving lease to any of the 49?—Certainly not to anybody who asked for it.

53,531. May I ask this; if the 49 make application to the Crofters Commission for the benefits of the Crofters Act, are you willing to support them?—Oh, there would be no opposition to anything of that sort.

53,532. You will give them the benefit of the Crofters Act if they choose to go before the Crofters Commission?—Anyone who is entitled to go before the Crofters Commission.

53,533. But I am speaking about the 49 who you yesterday told us were outside the benefits of the Crofters Act, and who need not apply to the Crofters Commission because they have no locus there. Are you willing to give them the benefit of the Crofters Act?—I cannot return an answer to that question at this moment.

53,534. Are you aware also that the improving lease to which you refer was to apply only to tenants paying £6 and above that?—Yes.

53,535. And are you aware that the whole crofting population of Lewis, over 4000 crofters who have got the benefit of the Crofters Act, would be excluded from legislation which had gone upon the lines of the improving lease recommended by the Napier Commission?—Yes, but I have not said that I approve of the £6 limit.

53,536. Are you aware that every crofter in Lewis would be excluded if Parliament had passed a Crofters Act on the lines of the improving lease recommended by the Napier Commission?—Probably that is so.

53,537. And also about nine-tenths of all the crofters in the rest of the Highland area?—Perhaps that is the case; I do not know.

53,538. So you are sorry that Parliament did not go upon the lines of the proposed improving lease, which would have had the effect of excluding nine-tenths of the crofting population?—No, because in that case I would not have had the £6 limit.

53,539. You appeared as a witness before the Royal Commission of 1883?—Yes.

53,540. Professor Mackinnon asked you this question:—'How many have you got on your estate?' of the crofting class of tenants; and you replied:—'Some 'hundreds altogether?'—That included their families.

53,541. Then Professor Mackinnon asked:—'How 'many families?' and you replied:—'About 60 to 80 'families?'—Yes.

53,542. That happened in the year 1883. Then, you appeared before the Colonisation Committee of the House of Commons in 1890 or 1891, did you not?—Yes.

53,543. And you were then asked by Mr Campbell Bannerman how many crofters are on the property? and your reply was that there were between 30 and 40?—Yes. We went over all that ground last night, Mr Macrae, and I explained then that what I stated before the Colonisation Committee was an off-hand statement. The question came to me without preparation, and I had to make an estimate of the number of crofters.

53,544. Is it not a fact that in reply to a further particular question before the Colonisation Committee, you spoke about the facts you gave us as 'thoroughly 'reliable?'—I do not remember making any statement of that kind.

53,545. You made reflections upon the statements made by Mr Alexander Mackenzie, and you referred to your own as actual facts?—Yes.

53,546. Now, you tell us that what you stated there was haphazard?—In regard to that particular matter it was. The facts that I said were correct were facts which I had ascertained before I went there. As to reflections, I think everybody who has studied that report knows that far more reflections were cast upon me than I cast upon anyone; I cast no reflections at all upon anyone.

53,547. Not personally at all, but reflecting upon the accuracy of statements made. Now, was there anything in the world more reasonable to expect of a gentleman in your position who would go all the way to London to inform the House of Commons,—is it not the most reasonable thing to expect from you correct statements of fact, when speaking about the property you yourself manage as factor?—Yes, but where is the incorrectness you speak about?

53,548. You said before the Napier Commission that there were betweeen 60 and 80 crofters on the Glengarry estate, and you said before the Colonisation Committee that there were between 30 and 40, and you say now that there are only 18?—Yes,—there has been some difference between these times. When I said 60 or 80 crofters to the Napier Commission, I must have meant all the smaller tenantry who have been spoken of here.

53,549. Your language is perfectly clear; no living man could use clearer language. Then, you wrote a pamphlet on deer forests, which I think you re-issued in the year 1890; is not that so?—Yes.

53,550. On p. 13 of that pamphlet, after referring to the manner in which the Napier Commission ascertained

Inverness.

George Malcolm.

the acreage under deer, you say that 'These figures, it 'may be added, remain unaltered, practically no 'additional afforestment having been made since the 'time of the Commissioners' Report.' You state in the year 1890 in your pamphlet, that no addition was made to the deer forest area as it existed in the year 1886, and as it was reported on by the Napier Commission?—Yes, but that was according to the state of my knowledge at the time, and that pamphlet was written some time previously.

53,551. But this pamphlet was revised by you and republished by you, and you went to London with it in your pocket, and you put it in evidence before the Colonisation Committee the same year?—The pamphlet first appeared as an article in a London magazine, and was republished in pamphlet form only once, immediately after it had appeared in the magazine.

53,552. Is it not a fact that in the year 1890 you reissued this pamphlet, and said in it that no additional afforestment was made since the time of the Napier Commission Report?—Read the passage, please.

53,553. I will read the passage for you:—'These 'figures' (that is, the total acreage as returned by Lord Napier) 'it may be added, remain unaltered, practically 'no additional afforestment having been made since the 'date of the Commission Report.' [The Chairman.—Do you adhere to that statement now?—No, it is found that there were afforestments.—Then, you withdraw that statement?—Yes, I withdraw it].

53,554. Do you then, after getting this pamphlet republished with this statement in it, go to London and put it in evidence before the Colonisation Committee of the House of Commons?—No, I put in no pamphlet, and the pamphlet was not re-published.

53,555. Did you offer it to the Colonisation Committee?—It was perhaps referred to, but I lodged no documents except the statement I read there.

53,556. Did you offer it to them?—No, not that I remember. [The Chairman.—Did you call the attention of the Committee to it?—The Committee spoke to me about it. Q. Then you referred to it as a document to which they might appeal?—No, my lord, I gave them on that occasion a special statement about deer foresting, which brought out a clearance between 1883 and that date of between 200,000 and 300,000 acres. Q. But was that pamphlet treated by you as a document to which the members of that Committee might properly refer as containing your deliberate statement of the afforested area?—Not at all; it was superseded by the manuscript which I read.]

53,557. Now, when cross-examined by Dr Clark there, did you not in reply to him say that 144,000 acres were added?—Yes, I suppose that is the additional quantity that I stated in my belief had been cleared up to that time.

53,558. So that, as a matter of fact, when you went to London with this pamphlet you knew perfectly well that the statement in the pamphlet was not true, and you went to London with the authoritative statement that 144,000 acres had been added?—I never put in the pamphlet as a statement of the acreage cleared at all; the statement which I read was the statement which I made up to date about the clearance of deer forest area.

53,559. The statement you made was that 144,500 acres were added?—Yes.

53,560. You are aware that that was not correct?—No, I was not aware.

53,561. Are you not aware now that it was half a million at the very least off the mark?—Yes, and I am also aware that that calculation of mine when it was made up was two years before the publication of the return of 1891, and I think it will be found that by far the larger part of the clearance took place in those very two years. By this the seeming discrepancy is explained.

53,562. Did you tell anybody that your calculation was two years old?—The calculation was not two years old; but it was two years old when the 1891 return was issued.

53,563. But did you re-issue your pamphlet in the year 1890?—No, I did not.

53,564. You have made remarks to the effect that the return of 1891 is not accurate?—I have made such remarks here.

Inverness.

George Malcolm.

53,565. Is it within your knowledge that deer forests were created that ought to have been in that return, but did not get a place in that return?—No, I am not aware of any.

53,566. I shall direct your memory to a few of them. Did you not know that Knockfin was made into a deer forest, and that it did not get a place in that return?—I am told that Knockfin was included in that return.

53,567. Under what head?—Under the group of deer forests belonging to Mrs Chisholm.

53,568. Are you aware that the Garbhat deer forest of 15,000 acres ought to have been in that return and was not in it at all?—No, I am not aware of that; I do not know where Garbhat is.

53,569. Or that Ben Hope of 52,000 acres was omitted?—No, I do not know.

53,570. Can you explain how it is that these matters which it is so easy for you to ascertain, being the Secretary of the Highland Property Association, and which other people can find out, are at variance with all these documents?—Nobody, I suppose, knew at the time that there were any more deer forests than those in the 1891 return.

53,571. In giving evidence and speaking about the population of Glengarry, you always put it down, I think, at about 700?—Yes.

53,572. Is that the population of the estate of Glengarry or of the parish of Kilmonivaig?—It is the population of the estates of Glengarry and Glenquoich alone.

53,573. You referred us to experiments that were conducted in Barra, and I think it is very important that some question should be put to you on that subject. You spoke of the experiments by Lady Gordon Cathcart in Barra as a proof that small holdings could not be created successfully?—Yes, I referred to these amongst others.

53,574. You alluded to Bentangaval, I think?—Yes.

53,575. You said that 35 tenants were placed there and that the experiment was a complete failure?—Yes.

53,576. But in what respect did it turn out to be a failure?—I detailed it when I read my statement.

53,577. Did the cottars fail in building houses; or, to put the matter shortly, do you know anything more about it than what you have told us in your statement?—I know nothing more than what I read, viz.:—'In 1883, Lady Gordon Cathcart declined an offer of '£131, 5s., from an eligible tenant, for the farm of 'Bentangaval, in the island of Barra, in order that she 'might divide it for crofters. It extends to 1750 acres, 'and it was apportioned among forty-five crofters. Of 'these only thirty-five took up their lots. The result has 'been a complete failure. The total rent was £133. 'Only £70, 13s. 8d. of this was paid even in the first 'year, but much worse remains. During the six years 'ended at Whitsunday, 1891, only £68, 1s. 9d. of rent 'was received, while the amount, exclusive of interest, 'which should have been received was £798—the 'arrears in this case amounted at the end of the seventh 'year to £792, 4s. 7d.'

53,578. Do you know the place personally?—No.

53,579. Were you ever in Barra?—No.

53,580. So that that statement may be correct or totally away from the fact for all you know?—The statement is a literal copy of what I received from Lady Gordon Cathcart's factor.

53,581. Do you consider that that is a correct way of stating evidence for the landlords?—Yes.

53,582. Gathering materials in that way and giving them to the Royal Commission as if they were your own, without a particle of personal knowledge as to their accuracy?—That is not the case. I explained to the Commission yesterday that I had my information from the various estate authorities. [Mr Sutherland.—Might I, at this point, interject a question? You will remember that in the case of Sutherlandshire, of which I have particular knowledge, I challenged the statement given by you yesterday on this subject, and you replied that it was given to you by the factor, Mr Maciver?—Yes.

Q. You are aware that Mr Maciver appeared before us at two places and had a full opportunity of making a statement, and was cross-examined, and he never made any statement of that kind. Of course, my reflection is not upon you, but upon a gentleman who would put in your mouth a statement which he himself did not make when he had the opportunity?—Probably he did not feel called upon to do it, but really I do not know.]

53,583. Are you aware that these Bentangaval crofters refused the old rent because they disputed the fairness of it, and applied to the Crofters Commission, and that the Crofters Commission went round and reduced that rent from £2, 18s. to £1, 10s.?—I have no information about the case beyond what I have read.

53,584. Would you be surprised to know that I asked the Commissioner for Lady Gordon Cathcart if the tenants did not regularly pay the rent since the Crofters Commission had fixed the fair rent, and that the Commissioner told me that he was perfectly satisfied with regard to that?—I should be very much surprised, because that is a reflection upon Mr Macdonald's accuracy.

53,585. Would you be surprised to know that Mr Ranald Macdonald made that statement to the Royal Commission in Barra the other day,—that the experiment had been a success since the Crofters Commission fixed the fair rent, that there was a good feeling between the tenants and her ladyship, that they have been very much benefited, and that the estate is satisfied that they did the right thing when they gave that land to the crofters?—All I know about it is that this is his statement to me in writing.

53,586. But you will admit that personally you have no knowledge whatever about the matter?—I admit that.

53,587. Do you consider it fair to damage a proposal in advance by experiments which you say failed, when you have no knowledge whether they failed or not?—Yes, if I am satisfied with the source of my information.

53,588. Are you satisfied now that that statement should not have been made yesterday before the Royal Commission?—No, I am not.

53,589. May I ask what would satisfy you as to that? You are told in the presence of the Royal Commission here that Lady Gordon Cathcart's Commissioner made that statement before them at Barra?—I have heard nothing about it except what you have stated yourself. [The Chairman.—The statement made to us by Mr Ranald Macdonald about Bentangaval was this:—'Bentangaval was let' etc., see p. 934. (Reads also Questions 39,245 to 39,256, p. 945–6). Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Perhaps I might be allowed to read one question that was put to him with regard to Bentangaval: Q. 'What has been the result at the last rent 'collection; at the last rent collection how much was 'struck off?—A. I make no complaint whatever about 'it, but it is certainly a very marked improvement upon 'the old state of things.']

53,590. Now, we can pass from that experiment to another one to which you allude. What is the name of the farm upon which the six tenants were settled?—A place called Allasdale. 'Another experiment of this 'kind in Barra by Lady Gordon Cathcart was Allasdale. 'It was divided among seven crofters at a total rent of '£110. The fittest persons in the island were selected 'for these large crofts. The land was excellent and 'everything was done by the estate to promote their 'success. They have been in possession for fully ten 'years, but this venture has also turned out a failure. 'Of the total rent accruing during these ten years 'not one-half has been paid; very large abatements have 'been made, yet still a very large amount is in arrear, 'and this, notwithstanding the fact, that at the end of 'the fifth year the rent was reduced to £80 or about 27 'per cent.'

53,591. Now you say that the rent was £110?—Yes. That is what is said here. [Rev. Mr Maccallum.—I think it is rather inconvenient to enter into this matter. Mr Ranald Macdonald was examined at great length on these very particulars, and it would be rather inconvenient to have that same evidence gone over again. Mr Macrae.—Except for Mr Malcolm's benefit. The Chairman.—We have all the information which Mr Ranald Macdonald could possibly give us, and I have no doubt, Mr Malcolm, you will allow us to correct the statements you made by a reference to the evidence which Mr Ranald Macdonald gave us? Witness.—I know nothing about it, my lord, except what is set down here, which is a literal copy of the statements that reached me from the various factors The Chairman.—And you have no objections whatever to our reading your statement along with his evidence? Mr Sutherland.—Allow me to repeat what I have already said, as my own opinion regarding the whole of this transaction, that gentlemen who have come before this Commission and made statements different from what they now ask you to make to the Commission do not serve you well at all. Witness.—No, if that is the case; but I have no knowledge of any different statements being made. Mr Sutherland.—But we have the knowledge because we heard both statements made. Witness.—Well, you must balance the one against the other. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Mr Ranald Macdonald made most important admissions when we were in Barra, and acknowledged the success of Bentangaval and of Garrygal, and the only experiment that he felt himself entitled to express any doubt about was that at Allasdale. The other two that have been practical successes include a great number of crofters who have had much benefit; and that benefit was admitted and acknowledged by Mr Ranald Macdonald before us in Barra. The Chairman.—I do not think we need carry this discussion any further.]

53,592. I want to refer to something that happened at Loch-Carron. Do you know the estate of Loch-Carron?—Yes.

53,593. Do you approve of the fixing of a rent by a landlord?—Yes, I must say I do.

53,594. What do you mean in your general statement when you speak of the crofters who were agitating as being selfish?—I do not remember stating anything of the kind.

53,595. I heard it stated 'actuated by anything but 'unselfish motives?'—I object, my lord, to Mr Macrae examining me upon a statement which he knows nothing about; he was not present to hear it read.

53,596. I heard every syllable. I was present the whole day. Perhaps there may have been a few phrases which I did not catch. But I should like to ask you this about Loch-Carron—Did you go there at the request of the proprietor to value?—I did.

53,597. Was that before the passing of the Crofters Act or after?—It must have been after the passing of the Act, but it was before the Crofters Commission visited the estate.

53,598. Was it not, as a matter of fact, after the Crofters Act passed, and after applications had been lodged, but before the Commissioners visited the district?—Yes.

53,599. And is it a fact that you recommended a reduction of rent of more than 30 per cent.?—The reductions were various. I inspected all the individual crofts, and I was very glad to hear later on from one of the Commissioners himself, that the reductions of rent made by the Crofters Commission tallied very closely with those which I had recommended the year before.

53,600. I can bear witness to that myself; I know all the cases. But is it not a fact also that there was no recommendation that the arrears accumulated under the rack rent should be dealt with at all?—The arrears were not submitted to me; I had no knowledge of arrears.

53,601. Is it not a fact within your knowledge that the proprietor claimed full payment of all the arrears as a condition of the rent that you fixed being adhered to?—No; on the contrary, the factor told me that the arrears would be largely excused if they came to a private settlement.

53,602. But the crofters preferred going to the Crofters Commission, and they got there a much bigger reduction than ever you proposed; and they got also about three-fourths of their arrears cancelled?—They did not get larger reductions of their rents, and what they got in the shape of cancelment of arrears I have no knowledge of.

53,603. That being so, is it surprising in the least that the Highland people would prefer dealing with a Land Court to dealing with landlords?—I am not qualified to answer that question. I do not pretend to know the opinions of all the Highland people.

53,604. Mr Alexander Mackenzie, editor of the 'Scottish Highlander.'—Do you know anything about the history of the raising of the 79th Cameron Highlanders?—Yes.

53,605. You led me, at any rate, to believe that these enlistments in the past were largely compulsory, that the people did not enlist of their own free will. I ask you whether you know that this regiment was raised directly in the face of the landlord's influence? Do you know that it was raised by Colonel Campbell of Avoch, to whom the Lochiel of the day refused to give the slightest countenance, with the result that the Cameron tartan was not adopted by the regiment; the feeling was so intense between the landlord of the day and a man who had no influence whatever at his back, that he raised over 1000 men within three months and landed with them in Stirling; came back again and raised within six months more another 1000 men in spite of the whole influence of the Lochiel of the day?—That may all be quite true. I never said that enlistment was compulsory, and I never said that there was not on occasions voluntary enlistment without any pressure at all.

53,606. Would you try after that to maintain for a moment that the Highlanders enlisted under compulsion in the past?—I did not say compulsion; I said they enlisted very often under a certain pressure by their chief or by relations of the chief.

53,607. Was not the pressure in this case directed against the enlistment?—I do not dispute that there may be cases where there was no pressure.—I have no objection, my lord, to answer Mr Mackenzie, but before answering any further questions I should like to know whom Mr Mackenzie represents? [The Chairman.—We have allowed Mr Mackenzie to put a question by favour. Any other questions he will kindly put through me.]

53,608. Mr Mackenzie.—You stated before various Commissions that the exact number of arable acres in deer forests was 3184. I want to know on what grounds you have now extended that figure to 3828 as stated in the paper read yesterday?—Simply that there are now more deer forests. [The Chairman.—And you take the arable land of the additional forests, and raise your figures in that way from 3184 to 3828?—Yes, in the same ratio.]

53,609. Mr Sutherland.—You have appeared before us in many capacities, Mr Malcolm. I am now going to ask you a question in your capacity of educational philosopher. You say here:—'The loitering march of 'prosperity of the Celtic Highlanders, in so far as it is 'due to dissimilarity of race or duality of language, is 'a condition which is gradually and at an increasing pace 'wearing itself out.' This is one of the conditions to which you attach importance as regards the future?—Yes.

53,610. What is the meaning of this?—I should think the meaning is what the words set forth; but I may say that I have the greatest faith in the spread of education in the Highlands being a very important and ultimate factor in the solution of all these questions which we have been considering.

53,611. But is the particular meaning attached to this sentence that you expect improvement to go on as the Gaelic language disappears and the native population dies out or is removed?—No, it is the spread of education that I refer to.

53,612. But how can the spread of education do away with a race?—Surely I did not say it was to do away with a race?

53,613. 'In so far as it is due to dissimilarity of 'race'; a dissimilarity of two races living together, I presume?—But you may take away the dissimilarity without taking away the race itself.

53,614. How?—You do not extinguish the people although you extinguish their language.

53,615. Oh, you want to extinguish the language?—Yes, that is all.

53,616. Well, it is your educational philosophy that amuses me. Is it a good thing to extinguish languages?—My own private opinion is, that it would be a good thing if the Gaelic language disappeared from the Highlands.

53,617. Is that your opinion?—Yes.

53,618. I think it affords a key to a great deal of the evidence you have given us, if that is the spirit in which you approach consideration of questions like these?—Well, it is a matter of opinion, but I do not think I am singular in holding that opinion.

53,619. Possibly not. You do not know the Gaelic language?—No.

53,620. And yet you consider yourself a judge as to whether it should be exterminated or not?—I only give my opinion.

53,621. But what is your opinion founded on if not upon a knowledge of the language?—Upon what I hear from men of business and from families of Highlanders themselves. Many Gaelic-speaking parents have told me that they did not care to have their children educated in Gaelic at all.

53,622. Where do you find these?—In my own district and in others too.

53,623. Are you aware that the teaching of Gaelic has increased to a very great extent in our schools and is encouraged by the Education Department?—Yes, the latter fact.

53,624. Would you consider that Department a competent authority to deal with the matter?—I have been told that in those schools in which Gaelic is taught, the results are not so good as in schools where English only is taught.

53,625. Are you aware that a higher grant is obtained in schools where Gaelic is taught?—No, I am not aware of that, but it forms one more grant.

53,626. Will you take it from me that that is so? I can give you the names if necessary?—Yes, I will take it if you say so.

53,627. Is a man who can speak but one language a better educated man than a man who can speak two?—My opinion is, that in this case the one language rather interferes with the other.

53,628. Then our system of educational philosophy, so far as it is based upon the acquisition of different languages, is altogether wrong?—It is open to you to say that I am wrong, and I may be wrong; but that is my opinion, at all events.

53,629. How do you expect the people of the Highlands to listen to any advice that is given them by men who think that the best way to do them good is by extinguishing their characteristics and their language?—My opinion is that a great many of the Highland people share my belief.

53,630. Supposing I were to go to Fife, where you belong, and tell the people of Fife that the only hope for them would be to cease speaking English—how should I be received?—That would be absurd, because that is the language in which the business of the country is carried on.

53,631. But every Gaelic-speaking person carries on his business in the Gaelic language. If you are to take away the Gaelic language from people who can only speak Gaelic, what speech do you leave them?—In that case Gaelic must remain; but my opinion is that they should all be taught English.

53,632. But are they not taught English?—And when we get to that, they will be in a better condition as regards their prospects in life.

53,633. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—This question about the language is one that touches the feelings of Highlanders pretty keenly. Do you say, in your capacity as representing the landlords of the Highlands, that it is their desire that the language should be extinguished?—

Inverness.

George Malcolm.

No; I say that I here represent the landlords of that Association only on general matters. I have not consulted them upon such a point as whether they would have the Gaelic language maintained or not.

53,634. You do not commit them to that opinion? —No.

[ADJOURNED.]

Under reference to question 53,338, p. 1352, the Secretary wrote to Mr Malcolm for a list of the office-bearers and members of the Highland Property Association, and was supplied with the following :—

HENRY MUNRO, Esq.
WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

DUNCAN DARROCH of Torridon (58)—examined. Duncan Darroch.

53,635. The Chairman.—You have a written statement, I believe?—Yes.

53,635A. Kindly read it to us?

Notes for Royal Commission (Highlands and Islands, 1892).

If I were to have to confine myself strictly to the letter of your instructions I would hardly be justified in appearing before you, or of making any statement to you, as I do not think it would take more than a few words or a few minutes of inspection to convince you that none of my deer forest 'is capable of being 'cultivated to profit or otherwise advantageously 'occupied by crofters or small tenants.' But as I notice that statements of a more general nature have been accepted by you, and as I presented a pretty full account of the results of deer foresting at Torridon to Lord Napier's Commission, perhaps you will allow me to touch on the history of the place since 1883, as I think a good deal of what I have to say bears not very indirectly on the subject submitted to you by the Government.

I must begin by saying that the anticipations of that time have been largely disappointed by the unforeseen and lamentable depression in agricultural affairs, and mainly in the price of cattle.

For instance, when I handed in my report in 1883, the people were getting for their stirks £7, 10s. and for two-year olds £13, in 1886 a good stirk would only fetch £2, 10s., while in 1893 an extra good stirk fetched only from 25s. to 30s., an inferior beast which would have fetched £6 in 1883 was quite unsaleable, and I myself sold excellent two and three-year old beasts at Dingwall in 1892 for 55s. per head.

In the year 1886, after the passing of the Crofters Act, I had meetings with my people, and found they were ready to agree with me as to rent, without calling in the Crofters Commission, and we agreed on the rent of £2, 15s., instead of £4, which reduction in face of the 66 per cent. depreciation in the price of cattle seemed to be reasonable enough; and in drawing out the leases I instructed my agents to make the rent £2, 10s., instead of the sum agreed on, so as to make sure of meeting them fairly.

The reduction of rent thus made amounted to 35 per cent. over the whole estate, and it is instructive to compare this sum with the amount of reduction I voluntarily made on my Renfrewshire estate, to tenants under twenty-one years' leases, where adjusting the amount of reduction to the circumstances of each separate case, I found that 31 per cent. over all proved satisfactory to both parties, and as the south country tenants do not depend on the sale of stock the reduction seem to be about in the proportion one would expect; and I think we may judge from this of the justice of the accusation sometimes made, that the crofters must have been robbed before these reductions were made, as the southern tenants who entered into formal contracts of their own free will had to have their rents reduced almost in the same proportion as the crofters whose rents were fixed by the proprietor, and if the crofter was robbed the other must have been robbed too and that with his eyes fully open.

These rents under the crofter leases were found to be 'fair rents' by the Crofters Commission.

As also the Wester and Inver-Alligin crofters were very desirous of keeping sheep, and as that part of the ground was always being trespassed on by sheep from the neighbouring estate, and had always been reserved for crofters' stock by me, I agreed to allow them to keep a limited amount of sheep, so many per croft, thus trying to avoid the evils I referred to in my evidence given to Lord Napier's Commission (p. 2986), of one man having a large flock, while his neighbour, paying the same rent, has only one or two. Now, owing to the action of the Crofters Commission, the crofters have no restriction of any kind on the amount of sheep stock kept, and I have many bitter complaints brought before me of the crops of those who have no sheep being depastured by the sheep belonging to those who have a large quantity, and who refuse to herd them, while all pay for equal shares in the pasture.

At the time of entering into my lease with the crofters in 1887, arrears had begun to mount up, and it became a serious question how to deal with such arrears, especially as it appeared from the action of the Crofters Commission that a certain percentage, generally a very heavy one, was sure to be wiped off; and, however this might be forced upon the Commission as the only way of dealing with very poor men who had actually spent the money, and who would be entirely ruined unless some such course were to be pursued, it appeared to me to be a great hardship on the crofters who had gone on paying their rents through all the agitation.

I was glad therefore to find a way out of the difficulty by giving a year's rent to all the crofters on the occasion first of Her Majesty's Jubilee, and secondly of certain occurrences in my family in which the crofters sympathised in a very kindly and cordial manner; and I then was able to put pressure on those in arrears and made them pay up, partly in cash and partly in works on the estate for their own benefit, a course in which I met with the full approbation of their neighbours who had not withheld their rents, and who got the full benefit of the reduction thus made by me.

At the termination of the five years' lease half of my crofters, all of them being Wester or Inver-Alligin people, applied to the Crofters Commission for fair rents, and as they employed an agent and would not discuss matters with me, I had to employ one also.

The Commission found that the agreements were valid under Section 5 of the Crofters Act, and that the arrears, all of which had been incurred since the leases came in force, were not competently before the Commission. These arrears, I may mention, have since been dealt with by me, and have all been settled.

The Commissioners also found that the rent was a 'fair rent,' and ordered a fence to be erected between the crofters and the forest, the proprietor to find the materials and the crofters to do all the carriages from the shore and all other work necessary for the construction of the fence; and a joint minute was signed by the respective agents agreeing to this on behalf of their clients.

At the next rent day my agent inquired of each crofter if he was willing to perform his part of what the Commission ordered, and I had to report to the Crofters Commission as follows:—'It came out clearly 'that, as to the labour of erection, some would do work 'at some time of the year, and others at other times, 'some not at all, so that if we relied on them the fence 'would probably never be completed at all, certainly 'not in the period prescribed by you. Most of them, 'however, were willing to carry materials, and looking 'at the whole circumstances I found myself compelled 'to contract with Messrs Main for the whole erection 'of the fence. They are to have most of the 'material on the ground next week so that the crofters 'can carry it at their leisure, in their slack time. I 'will then report to you those who refuse to perform 'their share of the carrying.'

It was then clearly seen how difficult it is to get illiterate people to understand the nature of an agreement, for though the Inver-Alligin people punctually and willingly performed their share of the work, the Wester-Alligin crofters utterly refused to touch it, and said that if Balallan promised anything of the sort in their name they had never authorised him, and he had better do it himself.

This will give your Commission some notion of the burdens likely to be laid on proprietors in connection with extension of holdings; as in this case, dealing with a friendly and honest set of people, I, by their sheer ignorance of business, was compelled to do nearly all the work they had promised to do.

At the next rent day I employed my agent to collect the rents from those who had applied to the Crofters Commission, while with the rest I pursued my old custom of collecting the rents alone, without any professional assistance; but there was no longer any reason to interpose anyone between us, and on the next rent day, 1893, I was glad to find that my return to the old personal relations was warmly welcomed by all, and that the only cloud which outside agitation had in all these years been able to raise between us had quite passed away.

It is worth while glancing for a moment at the impressions and inducements which had led them to waste my money and theirs in engaging agents to arrange what could easily have been arranged between us quietly as of old.

The reasons they had for going in for the Crofters Commission are really rather instructive: First, putting aside the idea of getting a reduction of rent, which I don't think many expected, the rent having been adjusted by themselves, there was an expectation among the ringleaders, whence derived I cannot tell, that they would be able to have the ground the same as the proprietors, letting the shootings and keeping the rents to themselves; the ringleaders here hoped to get Ben-Alligin and let it as a deer forest, and to obtain the right of catching salmon; the quieter souls who were contented with their lot were told that if they did not apply to the Crofters Commission they would be shut out from all benefits under the Crofters Act, and it was ludicrous to see the disappointment of the leaders, when they found that those who had declined to go with them had shares in the common holdings preserved for them in the findings of the Commission, while they also avoided the privilege of paying an agent to keep those shares for them.

The third reason was that pressure of a less reputable sort, not at all unconnected with threats of positive violence to limb and property, was brought to bear on the people, especially on old men and poor women, and of this I am well informed, having it from the lips of the threatened parties themselves.

Before quitting this part of my subject I may perhaps be permitted to say, that as far as I have been able to follow the action of the Crofters Commission the decisions appear to me to have been given with an earnest desire to carry out their very difficult task in an equitable manner. In my own case I expected my rents would be raised, while my crofters hoped they would be lowered—as we were both disappointed there is a certain amount of presumption that the decision was not altogether an unreasonable one; and before proceeding to deal with the circumstances of my own forest, I would like to say a word on the general question of what is called Migration.

Parliament, by the Crofters Act, has decided that to meet certain evils affecting part of the crofter population land rights should be taken from proprietors and given to crofters, without compensation; and I think that most people will allow that the landlords thus affected have, as a rule, accepted the situation, and endeavoured loyally to assist in carrying out the purposes of the Act, without any petty evasion.

Dingwall. — Duncan Darroch.

But, as Lochiel remarks in his memorandum annexed to the report of Lord Napier's Commission, of which he was a member :—'To come now to another 'class of proprietors—those who have managed their 'estates on strictly economical principles, without any 'regard to the wishes of the inhabitants; in other 'words, those who, many years ago, cleared the lands 'and converted them into sheep walks. These are the 'men against whom the indignation of the crofters and 'the crofters' friends have been mainly directed, and 'they will get off scot free. Their people have already 'gone. There are no townships to enlarge—no popu-'lation by which to form new townships. The pro-'posal now under consideration will not affect them in 'any way.'

If it be necessary for the public weal that land rights should be taken from one class of proprietors in the Highlands, it is difficult to see what reason the neighbouring proprietors, such as Lochiel refers to, have for claiming or expecting exceptional treatment—and it seems to me injudicious, to say the least of it, if there are any suitable lands to be had on such estates, not to devise machinery for utilising them in a similar manner.

I have for a long time been of the opinion that crofters had the first equitable claim to arable land lying near congested districts, with some reservations, and it was on account of my not being able to help the crofters in the place where I was that I determined to purchase an estate where I could carry out my views—long before most of the crofters' so-called friends stirred even a tongue in their favour—and, as I detailed at length to Lord Napier's Commission, I swept out the sheep and restored the arable and pasture to the crofters on the Torridon Estate.

I believe myself that there is very little land in the deer forests that can be so utilised, and if that be the case, it is surely a pity to allow so much clamour to go on, when so small a concession might suffice to remove any tangible grievance on that head.

I come now to the precise object of your inquiry, and that, as affecting the Torridon Estate, is, I presume, whether any of the forest 'is capable of being cultivated 'to profit or otherwise advantageously occupied by 'crofters or small tenants.'

Certainly none of it can be cultivated, as there is no arable land at all in the forest; as I explained in 1883, my first act when I came to Torridon was to give the people every inch of arable land on the Torridon Estate, except the portion required for the Home Farm, and since that time portions of the Home Farm have been cut off for the Fasag crofters.

But can the forest be advantageously grazed by crofters or small tenants?

The total area of my deer forest is 11,630 acres, and it is mountainous ground, with very steep rocky hills; there is no ground in it that ever has been or can be tilled, and no part fit for sheep wintering except the southern slopes above Loch Torridon, so that it is considered by competent persons that not more than 800 sheep at the outside could be wintered on it. The present rent in the Valuation Roll is £500.

If let to crofters as a sheep ground, judging from the values put by the Crofters Commission on other grounds, I should expect that the Crofters Commission would not put more than 4d. an acre on it—say about £193—a loss to me of a very large annual sum of money; but if it can be shown that this ground would be advantageous to the crofters I suppose it will be thought fair that I should be despoiled of my means, while the cabinet ministers who direct these measures against us feeble folks in the north can enjoy their more fertile acres without fear of disturbance. But let us look closer at the question from an economic point of view, and first let us look at the question of rates.

At present, in the parish of Applecross, the deer forests are valued at £2440, while all the other subjects amount to £2028, so that the forests pay 54 per cent. of the rates; if my forest rent is reduced over 60 per cent. I presume the other forest rents in the parish will suffer in like proportion, and £1464 would come off the total valuation, leaving it £3004 instead of £4468, and to raise the £1000 a year necessary for the poor and school rates, a rate of 6s. 8d. would have to be imposed instead of the 4s. which they at present average.

Dingwall. — Duncan Darroch.

The whole of the rates on the £2440 are paid by the proprietors, but in the rent of £976 to be substituted for it half would be payable by the crofters, and this means certainly less punctual and in many cases entire failure of payment.

And further, if the Government means to drive out the proprietors, and their shooting tenants, by abolishing the industry for the cultivation of which their houses have been built, and their estates equipped, it will soon be found that they have succeeded in driving out all the moneyed people, and that nearly all the rates will have to be paid by the crofters, which will mean that as comparatively little can be got from crofters, and nothing from landlords who have been made bankrupt, the indigent poor and the education of the people will have to be paid for out of the Consolidated Fund; a result for which future Chancellors of the Exchequer will hardly bless the present Government.

Next as to the sheep stock—here we are on no uncertain ground, as I obtained from the proprietor's shepherds, shortly after I bought Torridon in 1873, statistics as to the yield of this ground in mutton and wool, which you will find detailed in my evidence before Lord Napier's Commission (pp. 2899 and 2901).

The produce of the 6000 sheep here was £1156 value of mutton, and £855 value of wool, or say £2000 in round numbers; that is, each sheep on the Torridon ground produced 6s. 8d.; prices have fallen since that time, wool being only half the value, and the calculation was made from the large sheep of a well-appointed sheep farm, so that the sheep the crofter would keep would certainly produce much less, but we may accept the figures as assuredly not too low an estimate.

The purchase price of sheep to stock the ground cannot be taken at less than 26s. a head, it is to be presumed that 5 per cent. is the least rate of interest that they could hope to pay, and, as for the number required, Lord Napier's Commission lays it down (Report, p. 101) that not more than 3 acres of pasture apiece should be allowed for them, so that 3800 would be required for the 11,600 acres here. The average price of wintering in the low country is from 7s. to 10s., so we may take it at 8s.; this was always a serious drawback in these parts, and there was besides the great loss by sheep falling over the rocks, they say amounting to eight or ten at every gathering; altogether, though the former proprietor had all the low ground kept for sheep wintering, the very ground that my people now cultivate, it is said that he lost from £500 to £600 a year on the sheep farm, and I am told that all sheep farmers here became bankrupts.

At least four shepherds at £50 each would be required to work the ground.

Supposing the forest let to crofters for 3800 sheep the figures would be :—

Cost of wintering 3000 sheep at 8s.,	£1200
Interest on price of stock, £4940, .	247
Rent of 11,620 acres at 4d., . .	193
Occupier's rates, parish, 3s. 4d., county, 6d.	37
Wages of four shepherds, . .	200
Receipts from sale of mutton and wool, ...	——	£1877 1266
Loss on farm, allowing nothing for smearing, dipping, or losses, .		£611

Supposing it were let for 2000 sheep, one to every 6 acres :—

Wintering 1200 sheep at 8s., .	£480
Interest on £2600 price of stock, .	130
Rent and rates as above, . .	230
Wages of four shepherds, . .	200
	——	£1,040
Receipts from wool and mutton, .		666
Loss, besides dipping, smearing, and losses, ...		£374

If the crofters just let the stock grow to 300 sheep or so, as they do now, and herded them themselves, the account would stand:—Rent and rates £230, less receipts from wool and mutton £100, resulting in a dead loss to the crofters of £130 per annum.

It may be, however, that the Government may mean to make lands available to crofters by finding the money to buy stock at the expense of the public; one can hardly believe this when one notices all they have done for the crofters, for by the Crofters Act, described by a minister as a 'Generous Act,' not one penny was given to the poor districts, all that was done was to redistribute the property already there; and when a piteous appeal was urged for supplying the clamant want of roads and paths, a miserable £3000 was given for all crofterdom, while a wealthy railway company got £45,000 to help it to make a line which it had to make in its own interests.

But even if this were done, and 3 per cent. charged for interest, and if the land were to be given rent free (for if our property is to be confiscated why stop short of that?), even then the loss, if the place were to be fully stocked, would be over £300 a year, and this sheer loss, cash out of pocket.

But further, if the landlord is to be ruined, and the industry for which he has equipped his estate is to be prescribed, with his impoverishment will disappear the large sum now spent in wages—some £400 a year in my case.

So that by fining the country at large to find stock for the crofters, and by absolutely confiscating the landlord's property bought in open market, the crofters would be landed in an annual deficiency of at least £700 a year.

In other forests it may be different, I can only suppose it is when we have men getting up in the House of Commons and saying as Mr Seymour Keay said about ten days ago, that:—'Nearly 300,000 acres 'of land that could be cultivated had been added to the 'deer forests of Scotland in the last ten or twelve years.' Where this land is I do not know at all, and we hope to receive some instruction by comparing Mr Keay's estimate with the facts as brought out in your report.

But some doubtless think that the getting rid of the hateful landlords is quite return enough, especially as these people who think so probably would not suffer the loss; but I rather think that there is some little doubt as to whether the crofters think so. From what they say here I think they will be inclined to turn on the agitators if they don't get Government money to stock their holdings, and all the land for nothing, and will say even more than they do now that they have been just humbugged for political purposes. On the other hand I find my people still coming to me, and trusting me, as of old; remarking that it would be a poor day for this country if there were not a proprietor to look after things; so far from taking the kind advice of the agitators to destroy game, I find them this year priding themselves on the amount of grouse to be found on their pasture; and I am sure that the welcome which never fails to greet us on our return home is not an insincere one.

It is not a very favourable time for extending cattle grazings in the north, as the industry is really very much at a discount just now—prices of cattle are miserable, and last winter's inclement cold and wet weather destroyed a number of both sheep and cattle. I am told that some 20 per cent., or more, of the crofters' sheep died last winter.

Two entire crofts on my estate, and several portions, are now vacant, with no one to take them up. Last year a smart young fellow, son of a most respected crofter on my estate, married, and I asked him if he would like to take up one of the vacant crofts. 'No 'thank you, sir,' said he, 'I know what that means— 'spending my whole life in running after a few sheep, 'and never bettering my family.' So he has gone out into the world.

I stated to Lord Napier's Commission that, owing to my system of ameliorations, nine improved houses, with proper chimneys and practicable windows, had been built by the crofters, and that more were in course of construction. There are now 32 on the Torridon Estate, of which three are slated, six roofed with corrugated iron, and eight with felt, and others are in process of erection.

In connection with this comes the very frequent complaint that the Crofters Act has done them no good here, for before that Act their landlord was able to lend them small sums of money to help them in building, which course as they are independent of him, he thinks it not prudent to adopt now. They also wish their proprietor to act as of old in settling disputes, and think the law must be very bad which prevents his doing so; it is in vain to point out to them that they can adopt the Novar Act, of which I have furnished them with copies: it remains here a dead letter.

Then there is the getting them out of the miserable old system of run-rig, and getting each family on its own compact lot; this I was gradually overtaking, when the Crofters Act came and crystallised the multitudinous Alligin patches in the condition in which they still remain, as though many are anxious to consolidate, and every now and then appeal to me to help them, some few object, and there is no power anywhere to deal with the matter.

The population is practically the same now as in 1883, as will be seen in the appended table, noting that the figures for former years differ from the ones given by me to Lord Napier (Minutes of Evidence, p. 2905), as I sold Ben-Damph, a portion of the old Torridon Estate, to the late Earl of Lovelace, in 1885.

The amount of cattle has slightly diminished, but now there are 290 sheep besides, and the people say that there would have been nearly 400 but for the deaths last winter. The rent is nearly down to what it was in 1873, the land held by the crofters being much more in extent, but the arrears are only £28 as against £255 in 1873, and most of these small arrears are in process of being settled.

One mistake in the report of my evidence in 1883 I should like to note. In Q. 42,837, 'thirty-five lbs.' is put by mistake for £35, which was what I said.

I think I have shown that my forest is hardly 'available' for the purposes you are dealing with, but perhaps you would ask those who sent you whether there is not 'available' ground on their own estates where sheep could winter, and crofters have a chance of making a really good thing of it. I can't help thinking, for instance, that the lands of Dalmeny would profit the landless crofter far more than the bare rocks of Torridon, and if they are to get other people's land given to them, why not good land? I suppose it is because it is easier to deal with the few than the many that interests which those who sent you dare not touch cause this land division scheme to be confined to the six so-called crofter counties, and that English people think they can afford to deprive us of our lands, hoping that by casting us to the wolves they may save their fertile estates from the land nationalisers.

It is curious how a man should become almost a criminal by the fact of his risking his money in buying land in the north with a view to benefiting the country and the people; had we put our money in the funds, spent it all on selfish pleasures, and gone into Parliament to attack other people, then it seems we would have been such as the powers that be delight to honour.

If I am banished from Torridon I can anyhow retain, as long as I live, the happy recollection of my relations with the honest, simple, and kindly Torridon people; of seeing those who had no place of worship, no means of grace, supplied by the united efforts of proprietor and people with a comely church, and regular preaching, so that the eminent Free Church ministers who come here tell me that there is no such united and intelligent congregation in the north; of seeing them fight ecclesiastical tyranny with me, shoulder to shoulder, till our cause was won; of seeing a down-trodden, impoverished, and hopeless people gradually rising to something like comfort and prosperity.

53,636. You say in your paper:—'I have for a long 'time been of the opinion that crofters had the 'first equitable claim to arable land lying near congested 'districts.' Now, would you say on what you hold that equitable claim to be based?—I think that as the old inhabitants of the country they had a certain amount of claim.

53,637. 'To arable land lying near congested dis-'tricts, with some reservations,' what are the reservations?—I think that if the granting of that claim would distinctly spoil any large industry it should be exercised with caution.

53,638. In whose hands would you place the determination of that question?—I am only making suggestions for your Commission; I only wish to give evidence of things as I know them. I have not gone much into the question as it affects the rest of Scotland, because I think it is better to speak about what one knows oneself.

53,639. Is there any other reservation in what you suggested?—I cannot remember any just now.

53,640. You say that the total area of the deer forest is 11,630 acres, and I see these figures agree with those given in the Parliamentary return, the official return made in the year 1891?—Yes.

53,641. We may take it from that, I suppose, that there has been no afforestment of land since you purchased the estate?—Oh, yes, I afforested the whole of it; it was all under sheep when I purchased it, all the low ground was taken up for the sheep wintering, and the people were therefore starved. That is why I bought the estate,—in order to sweep away the sheep. I got plenty of abuse for this; they thought I was a sort of maniac to favour crofters instead of sheep.

53,642. What year was that?—In 1873.

53,643. Then, when you purchased the estate, the whole of the land that is now forest was under sheep?—Yes, and nearly all the arable land that the people now cultivate was under sheep. The low ground was a necessity for wintering purposes, otherwise the farm would be a total ruin to any farmer.

53,644. How many farms were there,—one or more?—At the time I purchased the estate it was nearly all in one farm, but there was the remains of a farm on part of it. By the remains of a farm I mean that there was supposed to be a tenant, but he was bankrupt. But all the sheep on the estate were sold at the order of the late proprietor.

53,645. Do you happen to remember how many sheep were cleared off?—You will find that stated in my evidence before Lord Napier's Commission, where all details are fully given.

53,646. Kindly turn to Vol. IV., p. 2905; is that what you refer to?—Yes, that is what I refer to.

53,647. The evidence going down in our records connects the two statements with each other?—Yes. I thought it better not to refer to this in detail, as it is all in print.

53,648. Does that statement say how much land was given to crofters, either as arable land or grazing?—Yes, I have detailed the whole thing there. It does not exactly say how much was given to them for pasture, because at that time they had the right to pasture so many cattle; but there was no interference between them and the forest and they could do pretty much as they liked. They had a right to graze so many beasts, and if they did not go too far there was no complaint; but then, when they applied to the Crofters Commission it was seen that that state of things could not remain, and the Commissioners ordered a fence; so that the crofters do not now get the same benefit from the forest, but what they have they keep to themselves strictly.

53,649. Do you happen to remember the extent of this?—3338 acres were given to the Alligin crofters,—that is the only piece specially dedicated to them; they have 71 acres arable and 3338 acres of outrun between the two townships.

53,650. That was land previously under sheep, and forming part of a larger area which is now forest?—Yes.

53,651. And that part you allocated to the crofters?—Entirely to the crofters.

53,652. Partly as hill grazing I suppose, and partly as arable land or reclaimable land?—They have got all the arable land; they are all allowed to use it all.

53,653. They had that before?—Part of it. All these matters are detailed in my evidence before Lord Napier's Commission.

53,654. Did the operations you then carried out have the effect of extending both their arable and their hill pasture?—Enormously, as you will see in the printed evidence; but this fencing off of the land was a novelty. There is one other township on the estate where they did not apply to the Commission and where there has been no boundary made at all, their cows still feeding in the forest. That you will see if any of you go down to Torridon.

53,655. How many crofters are on your estate?—You will find I give the total at the end,—there are ninety-one families.

53,656. Are you able to say what is the average size arable of each holding?—It is about 1½ acres.

53,657. And possibly you happen to remember the average rent?—£2, 10s. is the rent that was fixed by the Crofters Commission.

53,658. That, of course, included both the arable and the hill grazing?—Yes, perhaps I ought to have read the tables, which are appended to my statement.

53,659. How many new houses have been erected since the passing of the Crofters Act?—I can hardly find that out; they have been building them by degrees. Most of these were commenced before the passing of the Act, and especially as I do not now lend them money they take a great deal longer to build them.

35,660. May I take it this way, that a great many new houses have been built from the foundation since the Act, and a considerable further number have been repaired and improved since that time?—Yes, that is quite true.

53,661. Would you say that that building and improving is due in part at least to the operation of the Act?—I don't think so at all; I think it has rather kept them back. They say it has kept them back, because they can no longer get money from me to help them as they did before. To any man who liked to build, I gave documents promising meliorations,—he was to have the house valued if he was turned out, and all the houses were built on that footing; so that in that respect the Crofters Act confers no special protection on them. At that time I had the whole authority in my hands and I could advance money, and now that that is so no longer, they cannot understand it. They say it is a bad law if Mr Darroch cannot advance money.

53,662. They are quite aware that they have a statutory claim for compensation on renunciation of tenancy or on removal?—Perfectly.

53,663. The arrears stand in 1894 at £28, I suppose you have every hope of recovering the most of that?—No, there are only three rents there due by those who applied to the Crofters Commission, £2, 10s. each, or £7, 10s. in all, which certainly will come in; but there are one or two very old people who are just quivering on the verge of giving up the land. They say they will sell off their cattle and give Mr Darroch his own; but they will probably renounce their holdings and take simply a patch of potato ground.

53,664. You referred to the matter of grouse on crofters' pasture. Is the grouse shooting on the crofters' pasture on your estate very good?—No; very bad.

53,665. Be the quality of the sport what it may, are you of opinion that the sport does not suffer at all from the crofters being there and having sheep upon that pasture?—Not the least; not a bit.

53,666. We would like if you would give us the average of the crofters' outrun?—One would have to calculate the figures; dividing out the 3338.

53,667. I suppose each crofter's holding has an outrun pertaining to itself and the crofter also has a share of the grazing?—They hold it all in common.

53,668. Have the holdings not each an outrun pertaining to themselves?—No; that is what I was trying to get before the Crofters Act came, but now one man may have forty pieces of arable and the pasture is all together. Under the runrig system, if there is a good piece of ground it is divided into as many shares as there are people in the township. At Alligin it is in a wretched state of muddle. The crofters at Inver-Alligin, however, have divided it themselves and are doing very well; and at Fasag, which is near the post office, they have divided it themselves.

53,669. I observed that in your statement you made a reference to Dalmeny; I confess I regret that you should have done so, and I would like very much if you could see your way to withdraw it?—Well, it does seem a little rough that we who are trying to do our best here should be attacked, while gentlemen who direct the Government and rule the storm against us go untouched; but certainly as you appeal to me I am very pleased to withdraw the allusion. May I say 'more southern lands' or 'lands elsewhere' instead of Dalmeny? I feel that I am conceding a great deal to you. [Rev. Mr Maccallum.—You withdraw it simply because his lordship has appealed to you, and not because you see the unfitness of it?—Certainly.]

53,670. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Can you suggest any remedy to obviate the injustice of one crofter keeping more sheep than his neighbour on the common ground?—Well, they have a remedy at present, in the shape of the Novar Act. There are two ways of putting these things in order: the one is the personal government, which has been upset by the Crofters Act,—that is gone and past praying for, good or bad; and the only alternative now is, by degrees, that perhaps they will adopt the Novar Act. In the meantime there is nothing to be done. I have given them all copies of that Act, and talked to them on the subject. It is quite true that the landlord himself can take the initiative under the Novar Act, but that is a thing they might not like, as they might regard it as an interference. I believe it is the case that the landlord can himself apply to have the Act put in force.

53,671. Failing the appointment of a committee, the landlord can apply?—I feel that it would be rather putting a slur on the crofters to take that step, when they have a statutory right to appoint a committee themselves; I think it is hardly for the landlord to interfere. The question is somewhat a delicate one; it is not a nice thing to have to go to the Sheriff and apply for the appointment of a committee.

53,672. The Chairman.—It is not to the Sheriff, but to the Crofters Commission, and the Crofters Commission have several applications of that kind, where the crofters have failed to do so within the specified time, and the proprietor approached the Commission to get a committee appointed?—And you found no ill-feeling result?

53,673. Not as far as I know?—That would be an answer to your question; if the landlord thought it would not give rise to more trouble he would probably make the application.

53,674. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Have you any opinion to offer on the subject of club farms generally?—Well, we tried a club farm on my estate, and it came to utter grief.

53,675. From what cause?—The real cause, as far as I can make out from the people, was a general muddle; I could not make out anything else.

53,676. They had no confidence in it themselves?—No, they would not appoint a regular shepherd, and no one would go out to gather unless the rest did the same.

53,677. Of course it would be bound to fail if they did not agree to appoint a shepherd?—They would not agree to do it. There is a serious difficulty met with in dealing with these people, as you see from what I told you about carting the materials. Lots of them would have done it if their neighbours would agree, but they found that others would not, so they did not, and thus it dropped. That is the difficulty with these communities.

53,678. But I suppose you would consider that, in a district where the crofters did agree to appoint a committee to manage a club farm, that would be the best way of dealing with the common pasture?—Well, they really do now make a sort of club farm of it. For instance, at Inveralligin, where they have split up the arable land, the pastures are held in common, and they have a shepherd, so that it is something like a club farm, only each has got his separate arable.

53,679. And is the management of the sheep there fairly satisfactory?—Yes, I think it is fairly satisfactory.

53,680. Mr Sutherland.—Have you given us any indication of the distribution of the land among the people on the estate, Mr Darroch? I have been looking at the statement you submitted to Lord Napier's Commission, and I have not found the statistics as to acreage and population?—I thought I gave the acreage to Lord Napier's Commission.

53,681. Could you inform me if the following areas are correct:—Deer forest 11,630; crofters' pasture, 3338 acres?—There is a good deal more than that. There is pasture on my home farm and the other townships.

53,682. But the remainder is in your own occupation?—Yes. The total area of the estate is 16,800 acres: the forest occupies 11,630 acres and the remainder amounts to 5170 acres.

53,683. Of these 5170 acres how much have the crofters got?—There has been marked off, by the Crofters Commission, for the crofters, 3338 acres, leaving 1832 over.

53,684. Where is that?—That is mainly at the head of the loch.

53,685. In whose occupation?—Partly in the possession of the Fasag crofters and partly mine; we hold it in common, in a sense.

53,686. How many families are concerned in the 3338 acres?—I forget the population of Fasag: it is something like twenty families. The whole of the arable land on the estate, put together, comes to about 148 acres. There are about 91 acres in the occupation of the crofters, and 60 in the Home Farm, and all the rest is rocks and pasture.

53,687. Roughly speaking, then, out of an estate of 16,800 acres, 13,000 are in the occupation of one man and 3338 in the possession of the remainder?—The most of the portion you can make anything of is in the occupation of the crofters; the big acreage you talk of is land that I show to be utterly useless.

53,688. I am talking of the distribution of population on this area of land?—But you cannot put population on the top of these high hills.

53,689. You could occupy it for grazing. But I am talking merely of the distribution of the population. On an estate of 16,800 acres, the number of families is 91?—That was the figure in 1873; it is now 94.

53,690. And one individual has got 13,000 acres?—Yes.

53,691. I took it, from your statement, that your estate contains just the land in your own possession and the land under crofters; you have no holdings of an intermediate size?—None at all. I was trying to get them into larger holdings when the Crofters Act came and crystallised things as they were.

53,692. There are some points in your statement as to which I would like some explanation; these I will take in the order in which you put them. The rents were reduced, you say, from £4 to £2, 5s.?—Yes.

53,693. By voluntary re-arrangement with the tenants?—Yes.

53,694. What was the date of that?—It was in the end of 1886 or the beginning of 1887.

53,695. Subsequent to the passing of the Act?—Oh yes, it was after the passing of the Crofters Act.

53,696. And it coincided, very strangely, with the date of the passing of that Act?—Yes.

Dingwall. Duncan Darroch.

53,697. How long were you in possession of the estate before that?—Twelve years. It was the same time as I made the reduction of rents on my Renfrewshire estate,—35 per cent. in the one place and 31 per cent. in the other; the reduction of rents at Torridon synchronized with the reduction of rents in Renfrewshire. Immediately after Lord Napier's Commission came, down went the price of cattle, and we had to take notice of that, whether you passed an Act or not. Of course it did coincide with the Act, and you may make the most of that if you like.

53,698. What struck me was that, if the rents were too high in 1886, they were too high before?—Oh, no, because that was the year when the price of cattle was at its height.

53,699. But what cattle could they sell off a holding of an acre and a half?—A man always raised a stirk, for which he got £7, 10s., and to pay a rent of £4 out of that was pretty easy. They did not complain at all in 1885; but in 1886 there were violent complaints.

53,700. Did I gather, then, that to those of the people with whom you came to an arrangement in 1886, you gave leases?—Yes, five years' leases.

53,701. What was the object of giving them leases after they had got a permanent lease by Act of Parliament?—Because they said they would rather settle with me than have any outsiders, such as the Crofters Commission, coming between us. They said we had always arranged matters together, and they would prefer continuing to do so. They said, when I settled with them, that the only pity of it was that they did not have it in perpetuity.

53,702. But, under the Act, they have a perpetuity of tenure?—Oh, yes, but they quite understood that.

53,703. But you ought to have explained that?—I did all I could. Our lease was for five years, and when it was ended some of them went to the Commission.

53,704. Would they be precluded, by the existence of this lease, from applying to the Crofters Commission for extension of grazing?—I cannot tell you whether they would have been or not.

53,705. My own impression of the matter—but I am not a lawyer—is that they would?—I do not know at all; I am not a Scottish lawyer, and I cannot tell you.

53,706. But I think it is on the face of the Act, so far as I remember, that if you enter into a lease with the landlord it is supposed to be the same as a decision of the Crofters Commission, and you cannot get an extension of grazing?—Well, they did not seem to be dissatisfied with the leases: they took them before the Crofters Commission, and did not seem to think them in any way interfering with their rights.

53,707. You say:—'It was then clearly seen how 'difficult it is to get illiterate people to understand the 'nature of an agreement'?—Exactly.

53,708. Was that while this transaction of the leases was being carried through?—That was not a case of literate or illiterate; we arranged the subjects of the lease together by word of mouth, and the leases were not long documents, but just contained a few words saying what the holdings were, and each man had a copy of his own lease.

53,709. But you explained the arrangement to them verbally?—I explained verbally what was wanted.

53,710. Do you know whether, while they were signing the leases, they knew they were being excluded by the terms of the lease de facto from applying to the Crofters Commission for an extension of their grazings?—I do not know.

53,711. Then, with regard to the arrears that you dealt with. Were these the arrears that had accumulated during the twelve years?—I do not quite follow you.

53,712. You made an arrangement in 1886?—Yes.

53,712A. Was it then that you dealt with the arrears?—Oh, no, I did not deal with them at all.

53,713. Was it subsequent to 1886?—Subsequent to 1886. The arrears had been running on during the crofters' agitation, to a great extent, and were proving rather troublesome; and it was during the five years of the lease that I remitted two years' rent to the whole population, and then I made the people pay up the previous arrears.

53,714. Were they arrears that had accumulated under the lease?—There were some under the lease, but they have been dealt with since.

53,715. By yourself?—Yes.

53,716. In the same way, I presume, as the Crofters Commission deals with arrears?—No, I made them pay those under the lease, because they had had five years of the low rent, and of these, they had had two years' rent remitted altogether, so that they had only three years' rent to pay for the period of five years.

53,717. And did you start the leases clear of arrears?—No, some of them had arrears then; these were worked off.

53,718. So that, if left under the Crofters Act, they would have had the benefit of having the arrears dealt with?—Yes, and the man who would have paid up would have got no advantage, whereas in my arrangement he did: the man who paid his rent got the year's rent back.

53,719. You put a premium on the absence of arrears?—Yes, certainly.

53,720. You spoke of having applied pressure to get the arrears paid. May I ask the nature of the pressure?—Oh, yes, I told them that I should summon them if they did not pay up.

53,721. Did you find it necessary to take any legal measures?—I did not find it necessary to take any legal measures then. I never had any legal questions with my people till after they applied to the Crofters Commission.

53,722. Do you call it legal proceedings if they appeal to the Commission?—Yes, I do; they took an agent against me instead of applying to me personally.

53,723. You do not regard the Crofters Commission in the light of a judicial authority, pure and simple?—Well, it is something of the same sort: when they employ an agent, and won't speak to me themselves, but say 'We refer you to our agent,' then I refer them to my agent. I think that is taking legal proceedings; it may not be, but the question is one merely of definition.

53,724. You say you look upon it as tantamount to taking legal proceedings to appear before the Crofters Commission?—To put the matter in an agent's hands.

53,725. They can apply themselves?—They can, but they did not.

53,726. Would the mere fact of their employing an agent to apply to the Commission change the nature of the thing?—It did very much change the nature. [The Chairman.—I think what you mean is that going to the Crofters Commission was not a legal proceeding, but going through an agent was?—Yes.]

53,727. May I ask if you yourself employed an agent?—Yes, I did: seeing that they had employed an agent, I did also.

53,728. Do you carry on your transactions with them through an agent?—Never.

53,729. Have you a factor, may I ask?—No.

53,730. You do not think you suffer much on that account?—No.

53,731. You stated that you had hoped the crofters' rents would have been increased by the Commission?—I did.

53,732. May I ask you what were the grounds on which you hoped so; had prices risen in the meantime?—No, but I offered a large piece of land,—a very considerable increase, which they were to have entirely to themselves without interference, and I thought that, considering the acreage of the ground, I ought to have received some rent for it. I would have got it from outside, in the market, and that is what I call confiscation,—confiscation for the country's good. You have taken my land at a lower rent than I would have given it for.

53,733. But I suppose you are prepared to admit that that sort of confiscation has frequently taken place?—Oh, frequently, but I do not see why we in the north should be the only ones to suffer by it.

53,734. But people object when their property is confiscated?—Certainly I object, and I kick against it, and complain.

53,735. You do not believe in the principle of the Crofters Act?—I have not said that at all.

53,736. But I take it that the whole of your statement here to-day, or a great deal of it, at any rate, was directed to that purpose?—No, I beg your pardon. I am treating with a very special case. I am treating with my own case, which is the only one I know. What is done in other cases I really do not know; it is you who are to judge of that; but I will tell you what the effect is in my own case.

53,737. I think your statements on this matter are very general; I am not finding fault with it, but only calling your attention to it?—They are meant to be special,—not entirely special, but special to the class of people with whom I was dealing.

53,738. Now, coming to the point of your statement where you deal with the rates: I don't know that I followed you so clearly as I would have liked,—perhaps that was my own fault. What is the name of the parish?—Applecross.

53,739. You stated that, in that parish, deer forests paid 54 per cent. of the gross rates?—That is true.

53,740. Can you give us also the proportion of the total acreage which they cover?—I cannot give you that off-hand.

53,741. Don't you see how essential it is to making a proper comparison?—That is for you to look into. I am sorry I cannot give you the figures; I have not got them by me.

53,742. You state generally that 54 per cent. of the rates of the parish of Applecross are borne by deer forests?—That is quite true.

53,743. But you cannot tell me, in order to complete the comparison and make it of any value, what percentage of the total area is under deer forest?—No, I cannot; I could get it for you, but I cannot give it off-hand.

53,744. Have you any idea whatever? Is it more than 54 per cent. of the area of the parish?—Oh, yes, most of the parish is barren; everybody knows that.

53,745. So that land which occupies more than 54 per cent. of the area of the parish pays only 54 per cent. of the rate?—If you could make our hills fertile, and capable of bearing more, of course I would be very much obliged to you; we cannot do it.

53,746. But you might perhaps put them to better advantage?—I don't think so; I think I have shown you that.

53,747. I think we may take it for granted, if that is so, that you ought to be obliged to any person who could make them pay more?—Yes.

53,748. Have you noticed how much more valuable land becomes on which people are situated, and how it increases in the Valuation Roll?—No, not in our parts.

53,749. Have you compared, area by area, the land occupied by crofters and the land occupied by deer forests?—If you take the area of uncultivated waste ground, you could make a very good thing of it.

53,750. It is the tendency of the crofters always to make it arable land?—There is no land in my ground that could be made arable, not an inch that could be tilled which is not tilled.

53,751. When the people were put there first, how much was arable?—Those bits down by the sea, where the burn has brought down a little débris.

53,752. And is the whole of the parish of Applecross in the same condition?—Nearly all of it. I know the place very well, for I am Chairman of the Western District Committee, and I am Chairman of the Parochial Board: there is hardly a place where you could put a spade in.

53,753. This comparison you made applies only to the parish of Applecross?—Only to the parish of Applecross, and only strictly to my own estate,—that there is nothing you can cultivate there which is not already cultivated.

53,754. Then I think you said that, by the withdrawal of the deer forests, the rate would be increased from 4s. to 6s. 8d.?—Yes.

53,755. How do you arrive at that conclusion? Is the present rate 4s.?—About 4s. A penny in the £ raises about £20. We have got to raise so much by means of rates, and instead of getting £4000 odds to raise that out of, we should only have £3000.

53,756. And in making the calculation do you subtract the amount of the valuation of the deer forests from the gross valuation of the parish, and then proceed to divide it?—No, I take the difference between the rent one would get for the land under sheep and under deer.

53,757. The rent under sheep plus the game rent?—What game rent is there?

53,758. Over and above the sheep; did you put that in?—No, there is no game rent to put in.

53,759. Not now, but if there was a sheep rent you would also be able to let the land as a shooting?—Precious little shooting could be got.

53,760. When it was a sheep farm was it not a sporting subject also?—Hardly to any extent.

53,761. Are there no grouse on the land?—Very few indeed.

53,762. And no other game of any kind?—No other game.

53,763. Have you copies of the old valuation rolls?—Not here.

53,764. Are you aware that grazing subjects generally yield a higher rent from sport than from grazing?—In some cases they do; where there is plenty of heather the grouse shooting bears a good value.

53,765. Much higher than the grazing value of the land?—Where there is no heather you do not have grouse.

53,766. I would like to know whether, as a matter of fact, this place had a sporting value before it was put under deer?—It had some amount of sporting value.

53,767. Did you include that value in making the calculation?—No.

53,768. Do you admit that, to that extent, your calculation is misleading?—No, I don't; and I give this reason, that there is really no shooting to be had if you do away with the deer.

53,769. That applies to the estates of Torridon?—Yes.

53,770. But all over the Highlands, of course you are perfectly well aware that the shooting value is more in almost every case than the grazing value?—When you get out of the deer forest country no doubt the shooting value is great.

53,771. I am talking of land which before was sheep grazing and now is deer forest. All that you are entitled to claim, surely, as an increase to the rates, will be the difference between the grazing value plus the sporting rent and the rent now obtained as deer forest?—Yes: if you can get a game rent, of course that should enter into the calculation.

53,772. You have formed no idea in your own mind of the difference between these two?—Well, so far as my estate is concerned, there is really no shooting rent to be got out of it if you take the deer away.

53,773. Are you aware that Mr George Malcolm of Invergarry would not commit himself to the opinion that the difference between the two amounted to more than a farthing in the £?—I do not know anything about that.

53,774. He would not commit himself to an exact figure; and I think it is not too much to expect from a gentleman who makes a statement with regard to the effect upon the local rates, that he should be in a position to tell us exactly how much it would amount to in the £?—I don't suppose anybody could give it exactly; we only do the best we can. But I can tell you that, if you sweep away my deer forest, and I try to let my mansion-house with the shooting which remained, I could not let it at all; it would lie on my hands. The shooting rent is practically nil. Now, I am quite prepared to admit—because one always wishes to say everything that is true—that there may be in Applecross—I don't know, but there may be—better shooting than with me, but with me there is absolutely no shooting. It is only on the crofters' land that there is any grouse at all. The mansion-house would remain on my hands unlet, because it was built as a shooting lodge, altogether for the accommodation of the forest.

53,775. Then this statement about the rates in the parish being increased by such a tremendous percentage comes down to a very small thing, I think?—No, I don't think it comes to a small thing at all; you may reduce it a little,—I am sorry I did not try to find out what the forests in Applecross would fetch without deer, but I am afraid you would find it to be very little except the grazing rent. In my own case it would be nil.

53,776. Then you said that the land that was fit for grazing was taken away from the deer forest and given to the crofters?—Yes, that near Alligin.

53,777. What land have you got for wintering your deer?—The high southern slopes of the hills.

53,778. And do you find that that is sufficient?—The deer come down nearly to the sea, if there is snow.

53,779. If the land is covered with snow the deer must come down?—Yes, they have to come down, but it is to ground that is reserved for my own cattle and for some of the Fasag cattle. The Fasag people have certain rights in it, and the deer come and trespass on it down to the seashore.

53,780. But it would be necessary for you to have that ground in order to have a deer forest, I presume?—Well, unless they have a chance to go somewhere else; but if no snow comes, they never want to come down.

53,781. In winter?—Oh, never; they are always up above.

53,782. So you need only have low-lying pasture attached to a deer forest where there are heavy falls of snow?—It is only when there are heavy falls of snow, I suppose twice a year, perhaps for a day or two, they may come down.

53,783. And it would be no injury to deer forests to take away the low land from them?—Not as far as we are concerned. It is not in my forest; it was returned as deer forest land to Lord Napier, but I don't consider it as deer forest.

53,784. Why?—Because it is used for cattle. It is not fenced off from the forest, however,—so the deer do come down in exceptional cases, perhaps twice a year.

53,785. So you think no very material damage would be done to deer forests if the low-lying pasture were detached from them?—Not the least, in my case.

53,786. Well, you can only speak from your own experience?—Yes.

53,787. That is very valuable for us to know?—If it was fenced off it would be a very different thing.

53,788. Then as to the education rate: I think we have seen that the danger of the education rate, among other rates, increasing largely, would not be so great as you stated?—Well, I think it would not be far off my figure; of course it is difficult to go into a fresh calculation in a moment.

53,789. You said it might be possible for the education rate to be paid out of the consolidated fund? I said poor and education, I believe,—the whole thing,—because, if you ruin me, who is to pay the rates?

53,790. Consolidated fund has a technical meaning; I suppose you mean from public funds?—Public funds if you like.

53,791. Are you aware of the large amount of both these rates that is already paid out of public funds?—I am very well aware of it.

53,792. Are you aware what percentage of the whole education expense is paid by the State already?—I know there is a proportion.

53,793. A very high proportion?—Yes.

53,794. And a very high proportion of the poor rate also, and the expenses of management of the parochial boards, paid by the State?—Not very much: medical aid is paid, and there ought to be a great deal more.

53,795. Have there not been very large additional grants in recent times?—Two years we got it; but none lately.

53,796. Have you made the calculation what percentage comes from the central Government and what from local authorities?—No, I cannot go into that.

Dingwall. Duncan Darroch.

53,797. But you are quite prepared to admit that it is a considerable proportion?—Oh, no doubt: the relief in the shape of medical aid and cost of lunatics comes to a considerable amount.

53,798. And you have no reason to suppose that it might be otherwise made up?—I think the Government is very stingy about anything coming to these parts.

53,799. After getting so high a proportion paid to the landlords already, I should have thought it showed a little ingratitude to say so?—I am very sorry, but I think I must be very ungrateful; I think they treated us in a most niggardly manner.

53,800. You stated that the crofters lost twenty per cent. on their sheep. That is a very serious loss?—Very serious indeed; it is the worst winter anybody has known on the west; deer, sheep, and cattle all perished.

53,801. I don't know whether you expect a recurrence of this?—No, indeed, it has been most ruinous.

53,802. Was there a reduction of rent given on account of the great loss sustained?—The rent day has not come round yet.

53,803. His lordship asked you a question as to the houses that were built previous to the passing of the Crofters Act, and those that were built after it; I observe from the evidence you gave to Lord Napier's Commission that you gave some assistance to the crofters to erect their houses?—Yes.

53,804. Is the assistance continued under the leases?—No, it is not continued now; the leases have expired. They endured for five years, and at the expiry of that term the people went to the Crofters Commission. The leases are an old story now.

53,805. Although they no longer get this assistance, they still go on building?—To some extent they do, but it takes them a very long time to build.

53,806. When the houses were being built formerly, what proportion of the expense did you incur?—I did not incur any proportion. If a poor man came to me and asked for a loan of £10 to help him to build his house, I tried to give it. One does not do so now, as they are in a sense separate proprietors themselves.

53,807. Had those advances you made to be repaid? Yes.

53,808. I think you stated in answer to Lord Napier that the house would not cost much more than £10 altogether?

'Q. 42,754. The crofter lays out about £10?—'Something like that.

'Q. 42,755. And you contribute what you have 'stated; what do you value that at?—I have 'never tried to estimate what it is—a very few 'shillings.'

—Well, in the old times on nearly all these estates, as I daresay you know, the usual thing was for the landlord to give the crofter all the wood, and he built the house; but over and above that, if they wanted to build better houses, I would generally lend them something. It was just of the nature of a private loan, as you would give a loan to any poor man you knew.

53,809. You stated in your paper, if I remember rightly, that the Crofters Act took away the chance of melioration paid at the end of the tenancy?—It did not take away the chance at all.

53,810. You said they lost that right, did you not?—Not that right at all: it is only that as they are now separate proprietors and hold everything of their own, I have nothing to advance on the security of. I had some security before; I have none now; they are separate gentlemen now.

53,811. You do not regret that, I hope?—Not in the least, but they regret it in this way, that they say they cannot get the money to help them in building their houses.

53,812. But they are building their houses all the same?—Yes, but they say it is a very slow process.

53,813. If they borrowed money they would have to pay it back?—Yes, but they would not have minded that.

Dingwall. — Duncan Darroch.

53,814. It was not a big proportion, was it?—No, a mere trumpery thing; but a very small thing will help a poor man on.

53,815. Are you aware that under the Crofters Act a tenant, on leaving his holding, is entitled to compensation for the full value of his improvements?—Of course, I am, and my tenants know it too; we all know it.

53,816. Is not that one of the great inducements to build new houses?—But they had the same inducement before the Crofters Act was passed; they had that promise from me in writing.

53,817. That they would have meliorations to the full value?—Yes, to the full value.

53,818. Without any limit at all?—Less of a limit than there is now. It is limited now to what is suitable for the holding according to the Crofters Act, but with me it was to the full value of the improvements as valued.

53,819. Were you ever called upon to implement that part of the bargain?—Never, because it was only begun such a very short time; I suppose they had been three or four years at it, and there were only nine houses put up. Yes, I once had to give a man £20 for a house, and, I fancy, that was at least twice its value. Valuations are not a very nice thing for the landlord; they generally go against him, and I was allowing them the full value of what arbiters might decide. That they considered to be a great advantage, and I have no doubt it was, as it is far better for them than their rights under the Act.

53,820. You think so?—I am quite sure of it, because in the Crofters Act the compensation is restricted to buildings suitable for the holding, is it not?

53,821. Yes, but have you seen cases where the Crofters Commission has given compensation for improvements?—No, I have not, I am only telling you what the people think about it, and it appears to me that their view is not far out.

53,822. I think I have seen orders issued by the Crofters Commission in which compensation of more than £100 was given. Did you ever hear of a landlord giving compensation to that extent?—I am sure I don't know; I have not heard one way or another. My men would not build £100-houses, though perhaps these slated houses may not come far off that amount. But, now they are under the Crofters Act, they have got nothing to do with me.

53,823. Then, you said in reply to a question by Mr Shaw Stewart that you tried a club farm, and that it failed?—Yes.

53,824. They got into a state of muddle, you said?—A regular muddle; so they said themselves.

53,825. Was that club farm managed under the Grazings Act?—No, there was no Grazings Act at that time, no Act of any sort to regulate these things. It was in the year 1874.

53,826. It was under the estate management?—No, it was left entirely to themselves.

53,827. But it was at a time when there was no intervention of any kind by Act of Parliament?—None.

53,828. So that failure cannot be attributed to legislation?—Not in the least; I let them try it themselves, and they muddled it up.

53,829. But would they not look for guidance? Could not you help them?—It is not very easy to advise people in matters of that sort, as you would find if you had to deal with them.

53,830. I rather thought the drift of your evidence was that under the old patriarchal system everything went smoothly, but since legislation came in everything went wrong?—What I said was that sheep farming for crofters was not a very paying thing, and I instanced this case before Lord Napier. They could not agree together last year to carry my fence as they had promised.

53,831. Of course, you have no large farms, and you have no experience in equipping large farms?—No.

53,832. But you know the custom that all the fences are erected by the landlord, and kept in repair?—Oh, yes, in Renfrewshire I do all that.

53,833. Here the crofters had to do that themselves?—It was an order by the Crofters Commission. They agreed through their agent that they would do certain things, but when it came to the scratch each one said I will agree if so-and-so agrees; but they did not.

53,834. So they allowed the club farm to get into a muddled state under the old state of things?—Yes, and I had to spend this money in putting up this fence.

53,835. I gather then, that so far as your experience goes, you are not in favour of a club farm?—The only experience we had was not satisfactory.

53,836. But you are aware that you are sitting now in the neighbourhood of a place where club farms have been tried and found to be successful?—Do you mean near Dingwall?

53,837. Yes?—I don't know anything about that.

53,838. Where they have been highly successful?—I cannot say; I don't know anything about them.

53,839. Then, the general drift of your evidence, as I take it, was that you have no land suitable for the purposes for which we are sent to inquire?—Not a single inch.

53,840. Then, you went further afield, and you raised some objections that would militate against our finding such land anywhere?—What I say is that I don't think there is much in the forests, so far as I know: but it is for you to find that out.

53,841. But on grazing farms?—I don't know anything about them: I am talking of the deer forests.

53,842. And even in the deer forests?—I don't think there is much: of course, without examining them I could not say, but it is for you to examine.

53,843. I think you stated in effect, if not in words, that we would not find any?—That is my opinion,—that in going about I do not see much that could be added.

53,844. You said that those who sent us to look for such land might find some nearer home; but that is a matter that has been referred to already?—Yes, I do not see why they should not go to the south of Scotland or England.

53,845. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—I think you stated that you found your crofters, generally speaking, very reasonable and willing to come to terms with the proprietor?—I never had the slightest question with them at all about anything till that scare about the Crofters Commission came; and there is none now.

53,846. And the cloud has gone completely away?—Entirely rolled away. If you ask them whether they are oppressed, they will laugh at you.

53,847. And they are in a very reasonable frame of mind now?—Yes, as far as I am aware; certainly.

53,848. Now, that being so, how do you account for the large number of them that had to apply to the Crofters Commission?—I have tried to account for it in my paper. There were two or three who wanted to apply because they thought they would get the forest for nothing, let it, and pocket the rent. That is what the two or three thought, and that they could coerce or cajole the others into applying.

53,849. Do you think those who applied thought so?—They did think so; I know they did. One man is called 'Ben-Alligin' all over the place because he thought he was going to get the forest of Ben-Alligin.

53,850. Would you really think that the idea underlay any considerable number of cases that went before the Crofters Commission?—That I cannot say: I am only speaking of what I know. I do not, in the least, wish to insinuate that that happened anywhere else. It is only where a thing has happened to oneself that one is able to pass an honest opinion upon it.

53,851. Did you notice that under the Crofters Act it was quite competent for the proprietors to come to an agreement with their tenants, and such an agreement would come in place of an order from the Commission?—And that, sir, is the reason why I gave them the leases, which under Section 5 of the Crofters Act were held to be reasonable.

53,852. What I point to is that few proprietors seem to have availed themselves of that?—Well, I suppose a good many of them were rather afraid of being taunted in the way in which Mr Sutherland taunted me,—'how very odd it is that after the Crofters 'Act was passed you should have come to terms so very 'soon with your tenants;' but, when they evinced a wish to come to terms with me, I met them at once. I have no doubt at all, however, that many landlords hesitated because it would be thought that they were threatened or intimidated into it.

53,853. Were the landlords willing to give such concessions as have been granted by the Crofters Act?—It is very difficult for me to say what other people thought.

53,854. I would point out to you, for instance, that Lochiel stated that he expected his rents to be raised when they were dealt with by the Crofters Commission; but they were not raised, but diminished by twenty per cent. You also thought your rents would have been raised, did you not?—I certainly did.

53,855. Does not that show that the people were quite right in going before the Commission, and that the landlords were not ready to concede them such terms as they have got from the Crofters Commission?—Do you mean the general question, or my special one?

53,856. I mean with regard to crofters generally?—I think crofters generally were quite right to go to the Crofters Commission.

53,857. And they got better terms than they would have got if they had gone to the proprietor?—Much better terms. I think the Crofters Commission has been a sort of bankruptcy court, if you ask my opinion.

53,858. What is meant by that?—That the rents are reduced far more than they would have been in the open market, and that these people being poor got the benefit of being poor, especially in the matter of arrears.

53,859. Do you think now that the rents that have been fixed are too low?—Yes, I really think that the rents that have been fixed in my case are too low. They are lower than I would get from other people outside, I think.

53,860. But it is quite possible to get, in the open market, rents that would be too high, and which the tenants could not continue to pay?—Oh, yes.

53,861. Do you make that distinction?—Oh, yes, but I mean that from a solvent tenant one might get more. I don't grudge it them; it is the rent I agreed to put upon them, and it is found a fair rent, and I do not grudge it. But still it is lower than I could get in the open market, I am sure.

53,862. Can you tell us the effect of these leases of yours upon the status of the crofters? Do you think that by accepting these leases they have lost their status as crofters?—The leases are concluded; they were only for five years.

53,863. Are the tenants now crofters?—Directly the leases were over, part of them applied to the Crofters Commission.

53,864. The Chairman.—Perhaps I should explain, at this stage, that what you have described as leases were not dealt with as leases at all in the application before the Crofters Commission, nor were they treated as leases by your own agent. They were dealt with as agreements under Section 5 of the Act, and accordingly they are so treated in the Order of 20th September 1892, which finds that 'the said agreements are valid 'and binding between parties under Section 5 of the 'Act,' not leases taking or which might be held to have taken parties outside the scope of the Act, but agreements entered into under a section of the Act. Then, I think you objected, as appears from the Note of Objections produced with the rest of the proceedings to the Commissioner (Mr Macintyre) who had these cases before him, dealing with arrears, in respect these arrears had arisen under the special Agreement, and his finding on that point is:—'Finds that any arrears 'of rent arising, due to the respondent under the said 'agreements, are not competently before the Com- 'missioner; therefore sustains the objection taken by 'the respondent, and dismisses the application in so 'far as it craves the Commissioner to deal with the 'matter of arrears'; and thus the matter was finally disposed of. Fair rents were fixed, that question being competently before the Commissioner; but arrears the Commissioner refused to deal with on objection taken, in respect it was held that they were not competently before the Commission.—I am very much obliged to you, my lord, for clearing up the points.

Dingwall. — Duncan Darroch.

53,865. But you have, if I may say so, used the word 'lease,' which in this case is rather a misleading expression?—Yes, a misleading word.

53,866. Because they were not leases in the legal sense of the word, but agreements under the Act of Parliament?—Quite true; I am very much obliged to you.

53,867. Just to make the point quite clear, I may add that the words used by your agent are:—'Objected 'to the Commissioner dealing with the arrears due 'by these applicants in respect that the same fell due 'during the currency of agreements under Section 5 'of the Crofters Holdings Act, 1886.'—Thanks, I am very much obliged to you. That clears up what Mr Sutherland said about the leases. Of course, the mistake comes of writing in a popular way, without considering the effect of legal terms.

53,868. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—With regard to the question of rates, I think you gave the deer forest valuation as £2440, and other subjects as £2028, in the parish of Applecross?—The parish of Applecross alone.

53,869. I suppose the valuation of the deer forests includes the lodges?—It does.

53,870. Now, has there been any considerable outlay on these lodges?—Very considerable indeed; thousands of pounds have been spent in the country, which has all tended to ameliorate the condition of the people; and if you discourage proprietors from building good houses you do both a very bad turn.

53,870A. How many shooting lodges are included in this valuation?—There are only three.

53,871. Could you give us any idea of the cost of these three lodges?—It is very difficult to give any idea of the cost, because Applecross House is a very ramshackle old house, which has been added to from time to time, and no man in the world could say what it cost to build. As to Lord Lovelace's house, I don't know what it cost; mine, I daresay, cost about £12,000.

53,872. If you were to put down in the valuation roll a sum equal to five per cent. upon the cost of the buildings, I suppose there would be very little remaining as the rent of the deer forest?—Very little indeed.

53,873. It would perhaps come to more than the valuation of £2440?—That I could not say without looking into the figures.

53,874. But you would not be surprised to find, as the result of the calculation, that 5 per cent. upon the outlay would exceed the sum of £2440, leaving no valuation at all for the land?—That might be so.

53,875. You have been saying that the Government has been rather stingy in their treatment of the Highlands?—Very.

53,876. Still, they have been giving some special grants for the Highlands?—Oh, yes, no doubt they have.

53,877. Who pays the greatest amount of rates in the parish?—Lord Middleton.

53,878. And who comes next?—I would have to look at the valuation roll to answer that; I am not quite certain whether it would be Mr Murray of Lochcarron, Lord Lovelace, or myself. There are practically four proprietors.

53,879. Who has got the most benefit from the grants which have been given by Government,—these proprietors, no doubt?—No doubt.

53,880. And the Grants-in-Aid for the parish of Applecross have gone mostly to the pockets of these proprietors?—They have gone in relief of the burdens they have had to pay.

53,881. The proprietors have got them?—They have been relieved of burdens to that extent, burdens put on them by recent legislation. You may put it as you like, but that is it.

53,882. They have received these grants?—No:

they have got a certain alleviation of burdens put on the land by Parliament.

53,883. Put it this way: you have got the greatest benefit from these grants?—Yes, no doubt, the greatest sum.

53,884. And who make the loudest complaints of their inadequacy?—The crofters.

53,885. Indeed?—Yes, they do.

53,886. Louder than you have been to-day?—Yes, much louder, they are always growling about it.

53,887. How could they be louder than you have been to-day?—I don't know, but they do make a good noise sometimes.

53,888. Certainly none has come before us who has been so very distinct and clear and emphatic in complaints against Government for not giving more to the Highlands, than you; certainly, no crofters even made complaint that the Grants-in-Aid were not large enough?—Well, they have to me.

53,889. Do you think it is very becoming of those who get the greatest benefits, to complain so emphatically?—I do it as representing the people. I am the Councillor for the district, and they are always at me to try and get some more.

53,890. But it happens all the same that you get a very large benefit, and yet you complain so loudly of the inadequacy. Now, do you think that is the way to encourage the Government to increase these grants?—Yes.

53,890A. To give no thanks?—Yes, certainly, that is the way the Irish got it.

53,891. The Government give to those who are ungrateful?—Certainly; it is always the unreasonable people who get it, no doubt about that.

53,892. Certainly, you seem to think the Government are composed of very peculiar people?—Certainly I do.

53,893. Who will reward those who are most ungrateful to them?—Yes, certainly; look at the Irish.

53,894. Now, with regard to the Crofters Act, I think you expressed the opinion that this had done little for the Highlands, because it only redistributed the property already there?—I did not say it had done little for the Highlands, but it did not give any money. I mean that it is not generous; it gave no money to the Highlands, but it merely redistributed what is there already.

53,895. Redistributed what is there already; quite so. But don't you think that that is a very important benefit, to redistribute the property that is there already?—To take things that I bought in the open market, and hand them to some one else? It may be a great benefit; it may be just; but it is not generous.

53,896. But is it not very important that every one should have his own?—Certainly; I quite admit that.

53,897. And that the crofters should have their own?—Certainly.

53,898. So that the benefit may be quite as great as if it were even generous?—Yes, but the question was, 'Is it their own by law'? It certainly was not, or else it would not have been taken from us and given to them. If you had wanted our land, you might have bought it from us: but you said 'we will take your land and give it to some one else.'

53,899. Don't you think it will have a great effect upon the prosperity of the Highlands that landlords are not able to put rent on tenants' improvements?—Oh, I think it is a very good thing.

53,900. I think you founded an argument on the fact that the Crofters Act gave no money, but gave to every one his own?—I did not say to every one his own.

53,901. Re-distributed,—I suppose it was meant to give every one his own?—It might have been meant that.

53,902. You founded on that an argument that it was not likely that the Government was to advance money for paying for stock now?—Well, as their idea of generosity was giving our property to somebody else, I did not think that was like their giving money out of the public funds.

53,903. Do you think that is a fair way of putting it,—giving your money to somebody else?—Yes, I do.

53,904. Is it your money, the rent that you put upon crofters' improvements? Is it your own?—No, it is not.

53,905. Well, that is what the Crofters Act has done?—But it has done other things besides that.

53,906. It has, no doubt, given them a tenure?—Exactly; it has taken what I bought in the open market and given it to somebody else. That may be just, but it is not generous.

53,907. Would it not be perhaps more likely that, seeing the Crofters Act has worked so well without any money and by simply securing them the fruits of their own industry, they might try to extend it by advancing money to help the crofters to stock their lands and build suitable steadings? Would not that be a quite reasonable conclusion?—Every man has his own opinion, that is all we can say; we differ on that point.

53,908. You think it is not at all likely that the Government will do anything more to help the crofters?—I think it is very unlikely; but you may know more of what they think than I do; I have some experience of the Government, having gone on deputation after deputation from the poor crofters here to try and get a little money for roads to enable them to send their children to school, and for roads for communication, and we have never got anything but that miserable £3000.

53,909. Why do you say that you were going on behalf of the crofters, seeing you yourself, as proprietor, get the greatest benefit from Government grants?—As far as the roads are concerned for which we asked, I could not get any benefit of any sort. The people who send me have asked me to try and get roads which they urgently want for the convenience of living, and roads for the convenience of their children going to school. I have gone year after year to Government, and have not got a rap for them. I am not speaking for myself; I am speaking for the people.

53,910. But you have already acknowledged that the Grants-in-Aid go to the proprietors, most of them. Now, with regard to these other paths, do you think that it is not also a thing that might reasonably be done by the rates?—Foot-paths?

53,911. Yes,—roads perhaps,—not even foot-paths, but better roads than these. Is it not the duty of the district committee to have suitable roads, by getting such a grant as that which was given by Sir George Trevelyan?—A trumpery £3000; £3000 for the whole of Crofterdom! [Mr Macleod.—I beg your pardon, Mr Darroch, but I think you will find you are mistaken as to the amount of the grant; was it not £10,000?—For the county,—yes, I beg your pardon, it is £10,000. Mr Macleod.—I hope a similar looseness does not characterise your other evidence?—I hope not: one may make mistakes; I was thinking of our own county.]

53,912. That grant of £10,000 has gone, of course, to provide roads?—Yes.

53,913. Which is one of the things that require to be done by the District Committee?—Yes.

53,914. And which, if they did, they would have to tax the ratepayers, and to tax you much more heavily than the crofters?—In our district, this year, we have raised £2000 for the purpose of making new roads, and that is pretty good for a poor district. At present, we are in process of making these roads; but we cannot do everything.

53,915. Mr Macleod.—I think that you said that you appear here for yourself and yourself only?—Yes, certainly.

53,916. You do not appear in the interest of anybody but yourself?—That is so.

53,917. Then, when you said, a few minutes ago, that you were speaking for the crofters in your district, you were not speaking for the crofters?—Mr Maccallum suggested that in going to the Government for money, I was going for money for myself; but I said that when I was going for money I was going as a County Councillor, a very different thing. I have kept that out of my paper.

53,918. But I think you will admit that Mr Maccallum was correct in saying that, in the event of special grants being given for roads,—I won't say footpaths, because they could not be constructed under the present law, but roads,—it would, to a very considerable extent, relieve the District Committee, and, therefore, the proprietors in the parish, from the necessity of making those roads themselves,—that is a perfectly fair deduction, is it not?—We could not extend the roads anyhow; it is a thing we cannot do.

53,919. Why?—If you took the whole money in the parish, all the capital available, you could not make all the roads you wanted. There is a tremendous amount wanted.

53,920. But there is no limit to the amount that the District Committee can raise by taxes?—No, there is no limit.

53,921. Well, if you get a road by means of a special grant, to that extent it relieves the District Committee of the necessity of assessing for it?—It puts us in the same position as people on the east coast who have got roads.

53,922. But I want you to say yes or no?—Well, I say no; there is no obligation to make a new road.

53,923. But if a road is made, it relieves the District Committee from the necessity of making it?—No, there is no obligation or necessity to make it. The District Committee cannot assess for footpaths.

53,924. I know that; I don't require Mr Gunn to tell me that. Then when you say that there is no obligation or necessity for the making of new roads, was there no foundation whatsoever for your importunities to the Government?—Oh, the people want the roads very much, but I do not see that there is any necessity for the Committee making them; they may be advisable and yet no necessity. Are they bound to make roads?

53,925. I am not going into that, but I would like to get from you this; supposing there is a necessity for a road and you get a special grant for the making of it, to that extent the District Committee is relieved of the necessity for assessing, and, therefore, the proprietors in the district are to that extent relieved; is not that so?—It is not quite in that way, because we want grants to make roads which we could not possibly undertake and which there is no necessity for our undertaking.

53,926. But I say suppose a case where there is a necessity?—Oh, certainly, where there is a necessity, and where we are relieved of course it is a matter of words.

53,927. But, being a matter of words, you would not even admit it?—All right.

53,928. It runs through the whole of your statement that something has been taken away by recent legislation in the Highlands?—Yes.

53,929. What exactly, in your opinion, has been taken away?—Certain land rights have been taken from me that I have bought, and given to the crofters.

53,930. There are certain rights which you bought, which have been taken from you?—And given to the crofters.

53,931. What rights do you refer to?—Certain rights in dealing with land; they have the full power now instead of me. It may be right or it may be wrong, but there it is.

53,932. Define those rights; if you consider it a grievance to have been deprived of them, they must have been of very considerable value?—My ground is taken from me and let at a rent lower than I think should be given. I said I thought after the boundaries were a little enlarged and they were going to the Crofters Commission, seeing it was fenced off for them I thought the Crofters Commission should have increased the rent a little, and I think they should have done so. The difference there has been taken from me by the State.

53,933. It comes to this, that what you object to is the fact of the legislature having taken from you your right to rent your subjects at whatever you please?—To rent them at the market rate.

53,934. And, in your opinion, the Crofters Commission is, at the present time, fixing a rent lower than the market value?—I think so.

Dingwall. Duncan Darroch.

53,935. Do you think that the difference between the rent that the Crofters Commission is fixing and what we call the market value is not fully represented by the tenants' improvements which the landlord would have rented?—Oh, certainly not, certainly not with us, I am sure of that.

53,936. You are sure of it?—Quite certain.

53,937. May I ask you whether that is an opinion generally held?—That I cannot tell you.

53,938. You can only speak for yourself?—Yes.

53,939. Then, shortly it is this fact that you are not allowed to let the subjects at whatever rent you please?—Just so.

53,940. Of course, you know that the same thing has taken place in other places?—Oh, yes, of course. I know of lands taken for railways; of course it is for the public good, and people must have them.

53,941. Then, seeing you have such very strong views with regard to the legislation we have had in the past in the Highlands, might I direct your attention for a moment to this question of the number of houses that have been built on your estate?—Yes.

53,942. I think you informed the Napier Commission that between 1873 and 1883 there were nine houses built?—Yes.

53,943. And you tell us now that between 1883 and 1894 there have been a total of 32, including, of course, the nine?—Yes.

53,944. That makes roughly two equal periods, the ten and eleven years, during one of which nine houses were built——?—Yes, and a number of others commenced. As I reported to Lord Napier, a number of others were in process of construction; nearly all that are finished now were in process of construction then, or at least a great number of them. It is very difficult for them to get a beginning made; when I went there first, the people had not one rap to clink against another, they were most miserably poor, and it was some time before they got enough to be able to build houses. But most of these houses were certainly in process of construction at the time the Crofters Act was passed. There have been very few built entirely since that time.

53,945. Does that arise from the fact that they are not prepared to build new houses, or from the fact that the houses have been so improved that there is no necessity for further building?—Each man as he tries to get a little better on in the world tries to improve his house.

53,946. Naturally; but is the fact that the process of building has not gone on due to your ceasing your temporary loans, or is it because there is no further necessity for building?—They say they would build quicker if I lent the money as I used to do; they say the want of it is a certain obstacle to them. They all want to build houses, and very fit they should. I do allow them a little, but I cannot allow them what I did before.

53,947. Getting a higher rent of course you could afford it better then?—It was not a very high rent; one does not live by what one gets as rent there, when all is said and done.

53,948. I notice that you have been good enough to tabulate for us the position of the crofters when you came into the estate, when you read your paper before the Napier Commission, and the position of affairs at the present day?—Yes.

53,949. The population, as you say, is practically the same, or slightly increased?—It has slightly increased.

53,950. The number of families is about the same but there is an actual increase in the population?—A slight increase, but you cannot put much more of a population there.

53,951. Then, I notice that since 1883 — I think you stated in the body of your statement since 1886—the crofters have come into the possession of a considerable number of sheep, numbering 290?—Yes.

53,952. And they have also come into a larger number of improved houses?—Yes.

Dingwall. Duncan Darroch.

53,953. I further observe that you are actually getting more rent from the crofters to-day in 1894, notwithstanding the grievances you have against the Crofters Commission, than you were getting in 1873; the figures for 1873 being £126, 16s. 6d., and the figures to-day £132?—Yes, but I explained that they have now about double the extent of land they had in 1873. They are allowed to keep many more cows.

53,954. I understood you to say that they had all the land you could possibly give them; how do you say now it is doubled?—They had all the arable land; but their pasture is very much increased.

53,955. But you said that they had the whole deer forest before, and now they have only a restricted area?—I did not mean to say that they had the whole deer forest, but there was no fence, and if their cattle strayed into the forest, there was not much said.

53,956. Then they are not so well off?—They are better off, and they are worse off: rather worse, if anything.

53,957. Kindly explain that?—They are better off because they have got the land to themselves, and they can keep on it what they like; there is no restriction. But they are worse off, because their sheep cannot go stravaguing through the forest.

53,958. Then it comes to this, that being worse off and better off, it fairly equalises itself?—They are very much better than they were in 1873. You say the rent I gave you for 1873 was that which I found on the estate.

53,959. But you reduced it?—I beg your pardon; I find it is the rent I put on them.

53,960. That then is your own rent, as compared with a rent of £132 to-day; but you say the crofters are very much better; can you define how much better they are?—They have got much more grazing now than they had then.

53,961. What does it amount to?—It is very difficult to estimate because you see they were allowed to keep so many beasts, and there was no restriction of boundaries then at all.

53,962. And now?—Now, there is a fence keeping them back. They had not the forest before, although they strayed into it. In reality, there is not perhaps very much difference between what they had then and what they have now; then they had one cow, I think, and a follower; after that they had two cows when the Crofters Commission came; now they have some sheep in addition, and the ground is marked off for them. They had no sheep at the time of that rental.

53,963. Don't you think matters are, as regards the area of land held, fairly equalised?—There is not a great deal of difference one way or the other.

53,964. You would be quite willing to admit that having the place fenced to that extent, they are worse off; but they are better to this extent that having the place fenced, their cattle lie more on the ground, and are not so much disturbed as when they were going into the forest and were liable to be sent back again?—Yes, but the land fenced off will graze more stock than they were allowed in 1873 for the rent they paid then. They are better off, though not perhaps very much.

53,965. They are really rather better off?—They are really rather better off; but it is not a very great amount.

53,966. Notwithstanding the Crofters Act, they are rather better off?—I would not say notwithstanding the Crofters Act they are better off, but they are rather better off.

53,967. Their stock of cattle has increased you say?—Enormously. They were not allowed to keep cows, and the children were pale and emaciated, through not getting any milk; that is why I swept all the sheep away.

53,968. You say they have now a larger number of cows, and they have these 290 sheep?—Yes.

53,969. And you are not worse off. I see you put down your arrears in 1873 as £255, 14s. 1d., and to-day you are able to tell us that they amount to only £28, £7, 10s. only of which is due by crofters?—By people who applied to the Crofters Commission. But the £255 are not my arrears; they are the arrears which were due when I bought the estate.

Dingwall. Duncan Darroch.

53,970. You paid for them?—I redeemed them. I allowed the people to try and redeem them, and advanced the people money to pay them off. When I bought the estate they were owing £255.

53,971. And you paid for that?—I did not pay those arrears, but I advanced the people enough to pay them off, and they worked them off.

53,972. So that they actually paid it?—They paid it with certain deductions. They paid it honestly; they have always been honest people so far as I know.

53,973. And in every way they are better off now than they were then?—Oh, no doubt. I hope you will be coming down to see them.

53,974. I propose to put one or two questions to you on a matter that has been already dealt with by other Commissioners,—the agreements with your tenants. You say there:—'How difficult it is to get illiterate 'people to understand the nature of an agreement.'?—Yes.

53,975. But you are of opinion that they understood the agreement they came to with you?—Oh, there is no doubt; every one had a copy of it.

53,976. So that although they do not understand agreements in general, they understood the agreement they came to with you?—There were only two or three words in the agreement. My Lord can tell you about that: and they had regulations for peat-cutting which they put in for their own protection. One has to be very careful in dealing with those people about anything in a written document.

53,977. You say here:—'The reasons they had' (the crofters I presume) 'for going in for the Crofters Com-'mission are really rather instructive; first, putting 'aside the idea of getting a reduction of rent, which I 'don't think many expected, the rent having been adjusted 'by themselves, there was an expectation among the 'ringleaders, whence derived I cannot tell, that they 'would be able to have the ground the same as the 'proprietors, letting the shootings and keeping the 'rents to themselves; the ringleaders here hoped to 'get Ben-Alligin, and let it as a deer forest, and to 'obtain the right of catching salmon; the quieter souls 'who were contented with their lot were told that if 'they did not apply to the Crofter Commission they 'would be shut out from all benefits under the Crofters 'Act, and it was ludicrous to see the disappointment 'of the leaders when they found that those who had 'declined to go with them had shares in the common 'holdings preserved for them in the findings of the 'Commission, while they also avoided the privilege 'of paying an agent to keep those shares for them.' Now, is that a statement that you would wish to remain, Mr Darroch?—Yes, it is; it is absolutely true.

53,978. Do you mean to tell us seriously that you could prove that statement if you were called upon to do so?—No, certainly not.

53,979. Then, why make it?—Because it is perfectly true, and told to me privately by people whose names I am not going to give. Lots of things I know about this place have come to me privately, which I cannot give the details of.

53,980. Do you think that is information which you should put before a public Commission?—Yes, I do, because that is the way it has been done.

53,981. Although you admit that you cannot prove it?—Yes, I do not mean to give the names of the people who told me these things.

53,982. You said you were only speaking for the estate of Torridon, but I notice that you make some general statements as well. You say:—'I have, for a 'long time, been of the opinion that crofters had the 'first equitable claim to arable land lying near con-'gested districts, with some reservations.' That is, of course, a general statement?—That is rather general; that was my motive for going to Torridon.

53,983. You also say:—'But if it can be shown that 'this ground would be advantageous to the crofters, I 'suppose it will be thought fair that I should be Dingwall.

Duncan Darroch.

'despoiled of my means, while the Cabinet Ministers 'who direct these measures against us feeble folk in 'the north can enjoy their more fertile acres without 'fear of disturbance?'—Yes.

53,984. I suppose you will admit that that is a general statement?—I think it is rather a special one, is it not? There are not many in the Cabinet.

53,985. You also make a general statement with regard to land available for crofters in the deer forests of Scotland?—Yes.

53,986. 'Where this land is, I do not know at 'all?'—No.

53,987. That does not arise from your knowledge of deer forests, I presume?—I have seen a great many deer forests in going about; but where you will find 3000 acres of arable land to put them on, I have not observed.

53,988. Then, with regard to your own tenants on the Torridon estate, although you compliment them very highly in other places, you say:—'From what 'they say here, I think they will be inclined to turn 'on the agitators if they don't get Government money 'to stock their holdings, and all the land for nothing, 'and will say even more than they do now that they 'have just been humbugged for political purposes'?—Yes.

53,989. Do you wish that statement to remain?—Certainly.

53,990. And would you be able to prove that statement if called upon?—No.

53,991. Then, you say a little further on:—'So far 'from taking the kind advice of the agitators to destroy 'game,' &c. Do you wish that to remain?—Certainly, I know they were advised to destroy game.

53,992. Can you prove that?—No.

53,993. Mr Munro.—There is one subject you have touched upon to-day, on which I may possibly have misapprehended your meaning. You said, I think, that crofters in congested districts ought to have a first equitable claim to arable land in the neighbourhood?—Some sort of claim.

53,994. But I think you also stated that there was no land of that description on your own estate of Torridon that they might experiment upon?—I did give them the whole that I could, excepting what is reserved for my own stock; I gave them every inch there is. [The Chairman.—The words are:—'It was 'on account of my not being able to help the crofters 'in the place where I was that I determined to pur-'chase an estate where I could carry out my views]'.—You see I found that unless I was proprietor on a place, I could not do anything for the crofters at all, unless I had a free hand.

53,995. But the conclusion you come to is this, that where there is arable land in the vicinity of congested townships, that land should be divided amongst the crofters who wish it?—If possible, it should.

53,996. Then coming to the vicinity of Dingwall here, which you know very well——?—No, I don't know it very well; I know nothing about it, except from passing it in the railway.

53,997. I suppose you know, at any rate, that the crofters about here have complained of the inadequacy of their holdings?—You cannot say that I know of it; one does not follow all these matters.

53,998. Assuming that they did so complain, would you recommend that the large arable farms in this district should be split up?—I don't see any crofters in this district at all. You are talking of a different race of people, it seems to me. I don't know the circumstances here, and I cannot give an opinion about it. I know the crofters on the west coast very well, and where there is arable land on the west coast near congested townships it is a great mistake if they cannot get advantage of it: but as to the east coast I know nothing; it is a different state of things altogether here.

53,999. Did I also understand you to suggest that one remedy for crofter discontent would be to migrate them to the more fertile lands away from where they are at present residing?—If you take them from the Lews, which I believe is one idea of migration, why put them to the unfertile land of the north? Why not go to the south, or even to England? If they are to have a chance, why not give them a good chance; why confine them to the six so-called crofting counties?

Dingwall.

Duncan Darroch.

54,000. Have you ever suggested that crofters in the west of Lews should be taken and planted in the very fertile lands of Easter Ross?—I have heard about migration generally: where it is to go I do not know, whether to Easter Ross, or to Midlothian, or to England; I think it would be better certainly to remove them.

54,001. There is something in the suggestion, and I am disposed to concur with you. Now, about this grant which was made to the Highland Railway Company, your remarks seem to imply if they do not actually express condemnation of the Government policy, in giving so much money to a wealthy Corporation, when they give only a comparatively small sum for crofter purposes?—Certainly.

54,002. But, in granting the £45,000 to the Highland Railway Company, I do not know if you are aware that a condition was attached that they should build a harbour at Kyleakin?—Yes.

54,003. Which harbour will positively cost nearly the whole of the £45,000?—Then, you mean to say that the £45,000 is rather wasted?

54,004. I do not mean that at all; quite the reverse?—If that £45,000 had been given us for roads, it would have done something; whereas the Railway Company would have been obliged to make the line and the harbour as well, without the £45,000.

54,005. But I am sure that you will be disposed to allow that the money given to Highland Railway Company for the building of a harbour at Kyleakin will go a long way to help the crofters on the west coast in prosecuting the fishing industry?—Oh, no, it will do very little, in my view. I think if the money had been given for the Aultbea railway it would have been far better, but that is a matter of opinion.

54,006. You seem to convey the suggestion to us that if deer forests were abolished, poor rates would considerably increase, and fall entirely on the crofters?—Exactly.

54,007. Have you ever heard it stated that the increase in the poor rates was entirely owing to the depopulation in the Highlands?—I never heard that, certainly; was not most of the depopulation before the Poor Law Act was passed?

54,008. I am aware of that?—It is somewhat difficult then, is it not, to compare the one with the other.

54,009. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I would like to ask you a question or two on the subject of the Grant-in-Aid for rates, of which we have heard a good deal lately. Upon the question of road money, and the responsibility of District Committees in the matter, I understood you to draw a distinction between the desirability and the necessity for new roads?—Quite true; that is what I wished to point out.

54,010. And further that, generally speaking, it is impossible for proprietors to raise the required amount for new roads that may be desirable though not necessary, in addition to the heavy rates they have already to pay?—That is quite true. There is an instance just now; we are wanting to make a road from Diabeg, there are 200 inhabitants, and altogether some 300 would have benefited, but the district would not stand that; the other parts of the district would object to a special rate being raised, but by raising £2000 for the whole district we get £500 towards that road. Nobody could get the representatives of other parts to agree to constructing that road from the rates; unless we get something from Government, it must stop. There is no necessity there, but as you justly put it, a desirability.

54,011. So that where Government grants are given, the money is spent upon roads which could not be made at all without such aid?—Which, certainly, could not be made without it.

54,012. And it is, therefore, a mistake to say that these grants are given to the relief of proprietors?—I consider it an entire mistake.

Dingwall. — Duncan Darroch.

54,013. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—But the Grants-in-Aid to the Highlands have been spent in relieving rates, have they not?—Which grants do you mean?

54,014. All the grants that are given to the Highlands are in relief of rates?—In regard to that £10,000 grant?

54,015. With the exception of the £10,000 grant?—I think they all have been; but the grants we are asking for are not in relief of rates.

54,016. That is a point into which we have gone in great detail already and I do not propose to traverse the same ground again; but it is a fact that the proprietors are the people who have benefited by the Grants-in-Aid?—Oh, no doubt; they pay the lion's share of the rates, and it is quite right that they should get the lion's share of the relief.

54,017. You have already told us that under the Crofters Act no money advance has been made to the crofters, but a great deal has been given to relieve landlords, and still it is your opinion that the Government will never agree to advance money for stocking crofters' holdings, or for assisting them to build steadings?—Well, as they won't assist them for making roads and paths, I don't believe they will assist them for the buildings; that is only my private opinion.

54,018. The Chairman.—I am sorry I cannot find one of the agreements you made with your tenants referred to in the proceedings before the Crofters Commission; but, with a view to completing your evidence, perhaps you would be kind enough to send us a copy.

54,019. Mr Macleod.—In connection with this matter of roads, it seemed to me to be implied in one of your answers to Mr Shaw Stewart that the District Committee could not assess?—Oh, they can assess.

54,020. Mr Sutherland.—Then, as to the money received; is it not a fact that it would be spent on the private property of the landlords?—As I pointed out to the Government several times in going to them, most of the roads wanted would not benefit any proprietor at all. Take, for instance, this road to Diabeg; it goes through my property, but I don't want it; it is of no use to me.

54,021. Is not any money spent upon road-making adding to the capital value of an estate?—No.

54,022. Then it is mis-spent?—No, because I look not only to the value to the proprietor, but the comfort of the people.

54,023. If an estate is sold, do not all the amenities fetch a monetary value?—If an estate is sold, a road might probably be regarded as a disadvantage and not an advantage. Some proprietors object to have roads.

54,024. From the proprietors' point of view, it would be desirable to have no roads?—Sometimes. In some cases road-making may improve the value of the estate, and in others deteriorate it.

54,025. But if it does not add to its value, the money is mis-spent?—In this case I myself do not want the road; it will do me no benefit that I can see; but it is a public benefit.

54,026. Then, you deny that any of these public amenities on an estate add to its value?—You cannot call a road a public amenity on an estate when it is merely a passage from some other estate. In my own case I don't think it matters one way or another whether there is a road there or not. It may benefit the tenants, no doubt, but their rents are already fixed.

54,027. Would it not be an element to be taken into account by a public tribunal in fixing rent?—It might be supposed they would take that into account.

54,028. Who is to give you these grants you speak of, is it not the cabinet ministers upon whom you make reflections?—Yes.

54,029. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Are we really to understand that you have been asking for Grants-in-Aid of roads which would not add materially to the value of the property?—Not to the value of the estate; to the comfort of the people very much, but I don't think the estates will get any additional value out of them.

54,030. What is that comfort worth? If it is to add to the comfort of the people, then surely their holdings are made more valuable?—I don't think you could put any more rent on them on account of having these communications. In this particular case, the people would be able to get their fish to the market; they have got no access whatever except by sea at present; but I don't think Sir Kenneth Mackenzie would put more rent on them because they have got a road.

Dingwall. — Duncan Darroch.

54,031. Surely access to market is a valuable thing; if it is not valuable why should it be done?—For the comfort of the people.

54,032. But the comfort of the people has some value?—Yes, to them,—none to the proprietor.

54,033. In fixing the rents, have not the Crofters Commission to take into consideration all the circumstances of the holding, and would not the circumstances of the holding include a road to it?—I don't believe they will raise the Diabeg people's rents if they get a road.

54,034. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Are you aware that the Government, in 1885, introduced a Bill containing a clause which provided for the advance of Government money for the purpose of stocking holdings in the Highlands?—I do not remember it.

54,035. And that on the introduction of that Bill, Lochiel, who was a Member of Parliament at the time, spoke warmly in favour of the provision? Are you aware that Sir Kenneth Mackenzie of Gairloch, when a candidate in 1885 for Inverness-shire, also approved of such an advance?—No, I am not aware.

54,036. Are you aware also that Mr Reginald Macleod, when candidate, in a speech delivered in the Music Hall, Inverness, and published thereafter in pamphlet form, strongly approved of the advance of Government money for stocking holdings in the Highlands, and pledged his support to such a scheme if returned?—I am not aware of it.

54,037. Are you aware that at the General Assembly of the Free Church held at Inverness the other year, Dr Aird, as Moderator, petitioned Parliament in favour of the advance of Government money for the stocking of holdings in the Highlands, among other things?—It may be so; I do not know.

54,038. You are a Free Church elder?—I am not.

54,039. Well, you may accept, as a fact, all that is implied in my question?—I beg your pardon; what do you mean?

54,039A. All that has been stated about the Government proposal?—I thought you meant your question about the Free Church elder.

54,040. That Lochiel supported the proposal in Parliament, and spoke in favour of it a few days ago before this Royal Commission. Now, do you really believe that there is any prospect whatever of the Highland crofters turning on these agitators to whom I referred, who go strongly in favour of the advance of Government money?—No, I don't think so.

54,041. If you don't think there is any such prospect, why did you state it in your paper?—Because I did not refer to those agitators.

54,042. Now, crystallizing the history of your estate, I think we can arrive at a very short summary. It was bought by you in the year 1873?—It was.

54,043. How many families were there on it then?—Ninety-one.

54,044. Were they crofters?—Yes, according to the definition in the Crofters Act they were all crofters.

54,045. What stock had they?—Thirty-two cattle altogether, all told.

54,046. So there would be 59 families who had no cattle at all?—A lot of them.

54,047. And 32 with one cow each?—Yes, I think one man had two cows; but, roughly, you are correct.

54,048. Then, only 31 of the 91 had cattle?—That is about it.

54,049. The next fact then will be that a Royal Commission came and—No, not a bit of it; the next fact is that I swept away the sheep and gave all the tenants cows; that was long before your Royal Commission. I arranged that every one on the estate should have a cow.

54,050. That was the position when the Royal Commission came?—That was practically the position when the Commission came: they had got all the arable land that could be given them.

54,051. In 1883?—In 1883.

54,052. Immediately after the visit of the Royal Commission they got two cows each?—Oh, no, it was before that; well, I am not quite certain; probably you are right, if you have been looking into the matter.

54,053. I think you said it was your intention to increase the stock?—Yes, it was somewhere about that time; you may take it as at that time, for I do not remember exactly.

54,054. The next fact was the passing of the Crofters Act, and another Commission?—Yes.

54,055. And immediately following that, a very extensive enlargement of the stock?—No, I don't think there was much enlargement then. They had no more stock after the passing of the Act, except that sheep were allowed to them.

54,056. Exactly so, and sheep are stock?—Yes, but I thought you meant cattle stock.

54,057. Even with regard to the stock of cattle, is it not a fact that they have a much larger stock of cattle to-day under the Crofters Act than they had before, in 1885?—I am not sure about that.

54,058. Were they not restricted in 1885 to two head of cattle?—I could not be quite certain.

54,059. But, after the passing of the Crofters Act, they can keep three or four head of cattle?—It is two cows and followers, as far as I remember.

54,060. You stated in evidence here a little ago that they could keep as many cows as they pleased?—Now they can; they keep anything they choose, but the ground is railed off.

54,061. Under the Crofters Act?—Under the Commission.

54,062. And also a sheep stock?—Yes.

54,063. As a matter of fact, their stock to-day, under the Crofters Act, is considerably more than it was before the passing of the Act?—Yes, it is.

54,064. Now, you reflected on agitators. Do you believe that agitation had anything whatever to do with the visit of the Napier Commission, the passing of the Crofters Act, and the enlargement of the stock of crofters?—Oh, it had a good deal to do with it.

54,065. And is the result to the people that their condition has been very considerably improved?—Oh, yes.

54,066. So that agitators are not an unmixed evil?—A necessary evil; we do not like them when they come near ourselves, that is all.

54,067. Now, coming to the visit of the Crofters Commission, I think you admitted already that this agreement into which you entered immediately after the passing of the Crofters Act, deprived the crofters of the benefit of having their arrears dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—I don't think I admitted anything of the sort. [The Chairman.—What occurred was that your agent objected to arrears being dealt with, in respect of the agreement]. The arrears under the agreement. [The Chairman.—And the Commissioner sustained that objection].—But that is the arrears under the agreement; arrears before the agreement was entered into.

54,068. All the arrears?—There were no arrears at all at the time the Crofters Commission came except those which had arisen under the agreements; that is the point.

54,069. As a matter of fact, the crofters had no access to the Crofters Commission for five years?—No.

54,070. That is from the passing of the Act till 1891?—Yes.

54,071. And during that time, you brought pressure to bear to get the old arrears paid up?—Yes, I did.

54,072. With the result that when the Crofters Commission visited the district, the arrears that had accumulated during the five years the Commission could not deal with, while the other arrears you collected under pressure?—Certainly.

54,073. Now, is it a fact that you followed this up by legal proceedings in the Sheriff Court against your crofters, suing them for arrears?—Not as to these old arrears at all, but as to the ones under the lease I did, to those who applied to the Crofters Commission. [The Chairman.—Would you kindly use the word 'Agreement' instead of 'Lease'?—Agreement; I beg pardon.]

Dingwall. — Duncan Darroch.

54,074. Now, what was the amount of arrears against say one of the crofters? Give us the name of one of the crofters whom you sued in the Sheriff Court for arrears?—I have not got the details here; I cannot give you a name, but some of them had the whole five years and did not pay a rap.

54,075. You know your neighbour, Mr C. J. Murray, proprietor of Lochcarron?—Very well.

54,076. Are you aware that immediately before the Commission went to your district they dealt with the Lochcarron estate?—Yes.

54,076A. And the Commission reduced the arrears of John Mackenzie, Stromemore, from £33 to £1, 10s., and of his neighbour, John Matheson, from £40 to £4?—I have no doubt of it.

54,077. Will you not admit that, in the light of these facts, it is no wonder although your tenants should be anxious to get clear of your leases and be in a position to apply to the Crofters Commission?—There could not be any arrears of that sort, because there were only five years of the lease, whereof two years' rents were not charged; there could not have been more than £7, 10s. due by any man.

54,078. As a matter of fact, immediately on discovering that the Commission was dealing so fairly with tenants in other places, and immediately on the expiry of this agreement of yours, did they not all apply to the Crofters Commission?—They all applied,—that is to say 50 per cent. or half the people they could only get to go; it was only two or three who wanted to go, and they gradually got the rest to go also.

54,079. The whole lot went?—That whole lot went when they did go, being one-half of my crofters.

54,080. And they applied not only for a reduction of rent but for more land?—Did they? I did not know they applied for more land.

54,081. They got an extension of boundaries?—I gave them it; but I don't think they applied for it.

54,082. There was an application for more land?—I thought there was none, but it is difficult to remember. At any rate, I met you with a proposal to cut off certain lands for them. [The Chairman.—I have not the report at hand, but, according to the recollection of the Secretary and my own recollection, they made no application for enlargement of holdings; but there was an extension of land granted under the fair rent application,—about that there is no dispute].—Just so; I voluntarily offered them certain boundaries which they thought they would like to get; but they did not make formal application, in my recollection.

54,083. My recollection is that they applied for more land. At any rate, the boundaries were extended?—They were not extended, because there were no boundaries before; but I offered a certain amount of land, and that was agreed to be accepted by you as their agent.

54,084. You state that there were no boundaries before; but they were restricted I suppose in the amount of stock?—They were restricted in the amount of stock.

54,085. That was the boundary?—The only boundary.

54,086. And they were supposed not to allow that stock very far into the forest?—Quite true.

54,087. In a loose way?—In a loose sort of way.

54,088. But boundaries were laid down that day, and you stated, and I agreed with you, that those boundaries were far more liberal towards the people than being restricted to the stock they had before?—Yes.

54,089. They are now able to keep more stock, and therefore you enlarged their holdings?—You may take it that I did enlarge their holdings.

54,090. But it was in the Land Court that the thing was done?—It was in the Land Court, but it could have been done quite well between them and me without going to the Land Court.

54,091. Through agents?—Yes.

54,092. You were represented by an advocate from Edinburgh?—I was.

54,093. And the poor crofters were represented by me?—And a very good representative too.

54,094. Thank you. There is one other point I wish to ask you about.—I observe that in the joint minute (which I produce) signed by you and by my agent, there is nothing about an application for extension of holdings, but simply for fixing of fair rents.

54,095. One point more. You said that before the passing of the Crofters Act you had the intention of creating a new class of holdings, i.e., middle-sized farms?—If I said so I conveyed my meaning rather badly. I was rather trying to get holdings consolidated so as to enable each man to get a little better return.

54,096. You had the intention, to put the matter plainly, of getting rid of the native population?—Not at all.

54,097. Not of the whole, but of a portion?—No, it was only to get the holdings together, so that they would have had larger holdings.

54,098. The Chairman.—Is this the position of the matter—that you are of opinion some holdings are rather narrow, and you would like to see them extended by a consolidation of one holding with another, as holdings fall in?—As holdings fall in. For instance, there are two holdings vacant, and I would much rather that one man takes the two than two men take one each.

54,099. That brings me to this question: supposing a consolidation takes place on your estate, you would be willing, I suppose, to give a new holding on your estate?—That is what I am doing.

54,100. You have no objection to an increase in the number of holdings by an invasion of the land,—part of the land on your estate not presently in the hands of crofters,—by taking up land from time to time as it may be required for the formation of new holdings?—But there is none now that we can give; the home farm is already too small after the pieces I have taken off.

54,101. Mr Donald Macrae.—So that really your intention was by consolidation to have fewer tenants and a reduced population?—Oh, no.

54,102. What was to be done?—To try and consolidate the crofts as we could. There are two crofts now vacant, and I would rather one man took them because it is not a fit place for two people; but giving them to one man does not reduce the population. [The Chairman.—When a holding has become vacant it is because some one has gone away?—Gone away, or failed. Any one who has failed utterly cannot, as a rule, go on: and I say to these old people 'Would you like' to have a house and a patch of potato ground,' and I try to give the holding to some one else and make a little farm there.

54,103. Mr Sutherland.—I thought you said you were desirous of adding it to the neighbouring holding?—Yes.

54,104. Would the net result of that not be in process of time to reduce the population?—I don't think so. The old person would still have the house and half-acre for potatoes, his neighbour say, gets the vacant holding added to his own, thus making a larger holding.

54,105. So that while you decrease the number of the crofter class, you would increase the number of the cottar class?—You would keep the families going.

54,106. Mr Shaw Stewart.—As a matter of fact, have you not, according to your paper, three more crofter families on your estate now than you had twenty years ago?—I think that is about it, you can see I have not been diminishing the number.

54,107. Mr Donald Macrae.—And when you made them crofters and gave them the land, had they to remove to other houses?—Yes, two or three had.

54,108. I have no doubt you assisted them liberally?—I don't know about liberally; I did what I thought was fair.

54,109. They were very very poor;—you had no idea people could be so poor?—Miserably poor; no, I had no idea people could be so poor.

54,110. And yet they were able, with a little assistance from you, great or small, to put up the houses?—Yes. You see there was a very large capital expenditure on the estate at once, in the building of the mansion-house. You see upon every building that is put up, something like ten per cent. of the cost goes to workmen, so that there was about £6000 or £7000 spent upon work. Of course, that assisted the people very greatly.

54,111. The work you speak of being done by the crofter labour, and the wages going into their pockets?—Yes, the ten per cent., so Provost Ross tells me.

54,112. But, generally speaking, you do not see any difficulty in the way of small tenants like your own putting up houses?—No, so long as there is work to be got. It is a serious question in the Lews, of course, where there is no work to be had.

54,112A. You said that the people told you it was a very bad law which prevents Mr Darroch from making advances to assist them towards permanent improvements?—Yes.

54,113. But is the law very bad?—I am only telling you what they have said, that is their opinion. I don't think the law is bad at all.

54,114. Are you aware that Mr Murray of Lochcarron still gives yearly a considerable amount of money assistance to his tenants for building houses?—I know he is very generous.

54,115. Do you know that these houses are of a very superior kind, stone and lime built and slated, with an upstairs?—I think he is very generous indeed; he is spending a lot of money on it.

54,116. The houses cost £200, and he is advancing other money besides; and the money is paid very regularly?—That I do not know.

54,117. Then there is also Sir Kenneth Mackenzie of Gairloch who is likewise assisting his tenants?—I will take it from you.

54,118. So that really there is nothing in the Crofters Act to prevent a generous landlord from assisting?—But I am not a generous landlord.

54,119. But there is nothing in the Crofters Act to prevent a generous landlord (there are several of them) from giving money for improvements?—Oh, yes, but it is not so easy as it was before; there is not the same security. The houses are their own now.

54,120. Does that feeling of insecurity arise from a want of faith in the impartiality of the Crofters Commission?—Oh, no.

54,121. Then, is there any defect in the Act?—I don't think so.

54,122. Is not that, in your opinion, sufficient security,—the fact that the Crofters Commission are bound by the Act to provide a fair return for money spent by the landlord on permanent improvements?—If I lend a man £10, I am not going to get a Crofters Commission there to ask him to repay it.

54,123. But are the Crofters Commission bound to provide a fair return for the landlords,—to consider the whole circumstances, and they always do that fairly?—Oh, these are little transactions which do not require the Commission.

54,124. But really in the Crofters Act there is nothing to prevent or discourage the improvements?—They think so.

54,125. But you know there is not?—Well, I think there is; one has lost a certain security one had over their house, and one does not care to advance small sums of money in the same way.

54,126. In fact, the landlord has lost the power of applying pressure on the tenants?—Just so.

54,127. Merely that and nothing more?—That, and nothing more; that is the whole concern.

54,128. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—You said with regard to the reasons which induced the people to apply to the Commission, that these were very instructive. You have already said that you could not prove them; but do you think they are really credible?—Certainly

Dingwall. Duncan Darroch.

I don't know if they are credible to you, but I know that that is the case.

54,129. Let us, first of all, consider the reasons. They did not go for a reduction of rent; they did not expect a reduction of rent, you say?—A lot of them did not.

54,130. And still the application was wholly and solely to fix a fair rent?—A fair rent, yes.

54,131. These people made an application for one thing and accepted quite a different thing?—Yes.

54,132. They expected a thing they never asked the Commission to do,—they expected that they would let the shootings, and keep the rents to themselves, and the ringleaders hoped to get Ben-Alligin and let it as a deer forest, and obtain the right of catching salmon?—Yes, certainly; that is what they were told they would get.

54,133. And they have applied for a fair rent, in order that they might get a deer forest?—Yes.

54,134. Then, you say, they were also disappointed when they found that those who declined to go with them had shares in the common holdings preserved for them in the findings of the Commission. They also expected that they would get the whole of the common grazing; that seems to be the meaning of it. Would you say now, that these people were intelligent people?—No, I would not at all.

54,135. Let me turn then to the end of your statement, where you say that eminent Free Church ministers come here and tell you that there is no such united and intelligent congregation in the north?—Well, you must remember that fifty per cent. of my people did not go to the Commission at all, and among those you will find the people who are most looked up to.

54,136. Is it because the 'eminent Free Church 'ministers' are not good judges, that they have said that? Because, of course, that could not be said of people who have been acting as your people have been acting?—But only half the people went to the Crofters Commission.

54,137. But if half the people were so dull as all that, could it be said with truth that they are the most intelligent congregation in the north?—That is what they tell me.

54,138. And these very people are ringleaders?—Some people are very dull in worldly matters, so I am told, and very much the other way in matters of religion.

54,139. Is that your explanation?—Yes.

54,140. Is it not a very fair conclusion from all this that the reasons you bring forward are incredible, and that you yourself have shown that they cannot be believed?—You may take it that way if you like: you may take up any position you like.

J. J. R. Meiklejohn.

J. J. R. Meiklejohn, Factor for Novar, Evanton —examined.

54,141. The Chairman.—I understand you are desirous of giving in certain documents?—Yes. Mr Munro-Ferguson thought that some evidence given before the Select Committee of the House of Commons on the subject of forestry, might be of some use to the Commission. He intended to submit the documents to you in person, but he has been unavoidably prevented from doing so, and he desired me to express his regret for his absence, and to lay the papers before you on his behalf.

54,142. Just specify the documents you intend to put in.—I produce a list of them, as follows:—

Report of 1885 by the Select Committee of the House of Commons on forestry, at pp. 20, 22, 23, 26, 28, 32, 42, 45 and 47.

Report of 1886 by the Select Committee of the House of Commons on forestry, at pp. 18, 19, 20, 21, 24, 26, 27, 29, 30, 33, 34, 38, 39.

Report of 1887, vol. iii., pp. 9, 37, 43, 44, 45, 50, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 61, 62, 64, 66, 67, 68, 82, 83, 100, 101, 102, 115, 118, 119, 127, 128.

54,143. Do you wish to add anything?—Nothing further than to say that Mr Munro-Ferguson gave some evidence before the Emigration Committee during the late Government's term of office, and if the Commissioners desire it he will procure a copy and send it to them if they think it would be of any service. Dingwall. J. J. R. Meiklejohn.

54,144. We are obliged to Mr Munro Ferguson for his offer, but we have already copies of that evidence.

Donald Maclennan.

Donald Maclennan, Bog of Cullicudden (78). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

54,145. The Chairman.—We shall be glad to hear what you have to say?—I was born at Clascarnoch, on the road to Lochbroom, midway between Garve and Ullapool.

54,146. Do you know the districts of Strathdirrie and Strathvaich?—Yes, every inch of them.

54,147. Is there land in these districts that you would like us to inspect and consider?—There is, but the land is now under deer.

54,148. I see you have a written statement, which reads as follows:—'I was born at Clascarnoch, parish 'of Contin, on the Garve and Ullapool route, where my 'father and uncle had the grazing of the lands there, on 'which they kept both cattle and sheep. I know that 'cattle were sent there for grazing purposes from other 'quarters,—Strathpeffer, &c., for part of the year, for 'which a payment was made. The same land is 'now part of the deer forest of Kinlochluichart.

'Strathvaich, in the same parish, borders Strathdirrie 'or Clascarnoch already referred to. It is now a deer 'forest. It was, in my early days, in the occupation of 'several tenants as grazings.

'Strathrannoch adjoins Strathvaich on the east. I 'believe it was some years ago part of the summer sheil-'ings of certain of the small tenants of the Heights of 'Strathpeffer. It is now part of the Inchbae deer 'forest, on, I think, Mr Mackenzie of Farr's estate.

'Garbat, on the south-east part of the Cromartie 'estate, was the summer grazing of another section of the 'Strathpeffer tenants. These grazings were at one time 'let for £7, 10s. yearly. Till lately Garbat was under 'sheep, the late Mr Robertson, Achilty, being the last 'grazing tenant. It is now part of Mr Shoolbred's 'deer forest. These gentlemen have also the 'north and east of Ben-Wyvis and the lands of 'Kildermorie (all of which were formerly occupied 'by small tenants) as deer forests. They also 'occupy the southern slopes of Ben-Wyvis, on the 'Cromartie estate, as sheep graziers, presumably 'to protect their deer to the north, west, and east. 'I remember the southern slopes being in the 'occupancy of the small tenants of the Heights of 'Strathpeffer.

'The Tulloch hill ground borders with the Cromartie 'estate on the east. There is a considerable tract of 'ground there which, in my early days, was regarded as 'a commonty. I remember the day when the people 'were dispossessed of this commonty by the late 'Tulloch.

'Strathskia, to the east, also to the east of Tulloch, 'had, I was told, fifteen tenants at one time.

'Clair, part of the estate of Major Jackson, is to the 'east of Tulloch.

'Clair had, for several years, six well-to-do tenants. 'They had each a pair, and some more, of horses, 'a dozen and more cattle, and several hundreds of 'sheep, perhaps fifty or more sheep each. They kept a 'shepherd among them. They were dispossessed by 'the late Mr Munro, Major Jackson's predecessor, 'who shortly thereafter sold it to Major Jackson. 'The crops grown were corn, potatoes, and tur-'nips. The crops ripened as early, and the quality 'was as good, as elsewhere in the county. There 'were also small tenants at Rhidarroch and Knock-'nimartin. Also several smaller tenants at Bogreach, 'all on the Swordale estate. All these lands are 'now in the hands of the proprietor, Major Jackson,

'and under sheep. The former proprietor, Mr Munro, 'occupied the farm of Swordale, and had farm servants 'there just as Major Jackson has. Probably, Major 'Jackson has more personal and domestic servants than 'Mr Munro. It would be immensely preferable, in my 'opinion, to have those various lands occupied by small 'tenants as before.

'It is utterly untrue to say that the crops did not 'come to maturity there. It is also absurd to say that 'the number of workmen employed by Major Jackson 'compensate for the various tenants referred to.

(Signed) 'DONALD MACLENNAN.'

54,149. That statement which I have read expresses your views, does it not?—Yes. I know that all you have said is right, but I am hardly able to follow it in English. I know the deer forests right on to Lochaber.

54,150. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Are you aware that tenants were evicted from Strathconan?—I know the tenantry removed from Strathconan; they were removed from better places than Strathconan. They were removed from Lochbroom; that was the hardest case. There were twenty-one tenants removed from Lochbroom; I saw them myself.

54,151. Did some of those tenants who were evicted from Strathconan settle on the Heights of Knockfarrel?—Yes, and they are there still.

54,152. Was it to old arable lands they were put there, or was it to wild waste land?—Wild land; but it was turned over for them.

54,153. Who built the houses?—They built their own houses.

54,154. Did they get any assistance?—I am not aware that they did.

54,155. Did they make great improvements on these crofts?—They have made all the improvements on them that they could, in order to earn their living, and they have kept the places still.

54,156. Do they live comfortably?—It is a hard living; they have only 10 acres each, and some only 5 acres. I could tell you a great deal more.

54,157. Mr Sutherland.—Can you tell us of any other places besides those mentioned in the paper where we could see the land?—I can name any place in the county of Ross: I will not go to Sutherland, but on this side I can name any place in the county of Ross. I dealt there for twenty years. That was before I was transported; I was transported into the Black Isle, and I thrived there in spite of them.

DONALD MUNRO, Farmer, Knockancaoirin, by Evanton (65)—examined.

54,158. The Chairman.—What lands are you able to speak of?—Lands just in the neighbourhood, on the estate of Fowlis; it is there I was born and bred.

54,159. In the neighbourhood of Evanton?—Yes.

54,160. What are the names of the lands?—I know all the lands about there.

54,161. Is there any land there suitable for occupation by crofters?—There are lands there that I have seen occupied by crofters.

54,162. How are these lands now occupied?—As sheep farms.

54,163. What are the names of the farms?—The principal and largest is the farm of Clair; and again there is a place on the Fowlis property called Bog-na-Flaun where I have seen a crofter. That is a place that was not suitable for any farmer to live in, because the crops were always destroyed by frost in September.

54,164. Upon whose estate is Clair situated?—Major Jackson's. First of all, it belonged to the Fowlis family, who sold it to John Munro, or, as he was generally called, John Munro 'Dearg.' He was the father of William Munro; and it was sold by William Munro's son, John Munro, to Major Jackson.

54,165. What was the date of that transaction?—I cannot exactly say, but it was some years ago.

54,166. Do you remember crofters living at Clair?—Yes, I do. Dingwall. Donald Munro.

54,167. Do you remember how many years ago that is?—I cannot state the year, but it was two or three years before Major Jackson bought the property. [Mr H. V. Maccallum.—Major Jackson bought the property on 26th February 1885].

54,168. How many crofters were there?—There were six crofters in Clair, and three or four more in a place called Bogriach, to the east of that.

54,169. That land is now under grazing?—Under sheep.

54,170. And, I think you say, it is suitable for reoccupation?—Well, the people who were there were making a comfortable living, though in some years they would be very much distressed with bad weather. A storm might come on suddenly, and I have seen several years when every stook they had was under snow.

54,171. Have you seen that several years running?—Not several years running.

54,172. At what time of year did that happen?—In October, and sometimes in November.

54,173. Is it a very late place?—It is a late climate, certainly; the soil is good, but the climate is late.

54,174. The climate presents a difficulty in getting the crops secured?—Yes.

54,175. You said that these people, owing to the weather, had a good deal of trouble with their grain?—Yes, to get it secured; and again in spring, the frost may continue long in the season before they could get their land tilled to sow their crops.

54,176. What was their usual time for sowing?—It would be well on in April before they could get the land ploughed.

54,177. Did they ever get their crops in in September?—Not in September, in my recollection, except it might be a special year of an early harvest.

54,178. They could not get them in before October or November?—No, they could not.

54,179. In view of that state of matters, would you be in favour of people going back there?—Well, I cannot say as to that.

54,180. Does it stand pretty high?—It stands pretty high.

54,181. Is the altitude somewhere about 700 feet?—Hardly 700 feet.

54,182. Between 600 and 700 feet?—It will be that, at least the top of it. But the people who were there depended more upon cattle and sheep than on crops.

54,183. Did they, as a rule, crop sufficient to winter their cattle and sheep on their own holdings?—They had the grazing of the hill at the back of the place. They kept their cattle there in summer, and sold most of them in the beginning of winter, keeping the cows and calves.

54,184. And they were able to winter these?—Yes. They always took up their turnips early in the season, as early as they could, and the sheep had then liberty to come down on the arable land.

54,185. They depended for their rent and means of livelihood more upon stock than anything else?—They did.

54,186. And was the stock a good stock?—Yes, they kept nice Highland cattle.

54,187. And had they sheep also?—Yes, they had sheep; they depended a good deal upon the sheep.

54,188. Besides Clair and Bogriach, is there any other place you wish to mention?—All the other places on the Fowlis property are occupied by tenants; in some of them I never saw tenants before the present tenants, who had to make it themselves.

54,189. Do you mean crofting tenants?—Crofting tenants.

54,190. These lands you now refer to are all occupied by tenants of the crofter class?—They are. As far as I know, there is not a bit of Fowlis that I ever saw a crofter in formerly except Bog-na-Flaun; and it is not a place suitable for crofters.

54,191. Why not?—Because it is back-lying, and very cold; the frosts used always to come up from the river and spoil it. I have seen the crop so white with frost that there was not a particle of substance in it.

Dingwall.

Donald Munro.

54,192. You refer to the chilly vapour creeping up the river?—Yes.

54,193. Mr Macleod.—Are there any large holdings on the Fowlis estate?—Yes, there are.

54,194. Are there a number of small tenancies?—Yes, there are a few small tenancies; there is a strip farther up than where I live, where five tenants almost entirely made their land; of course, they were helped by the proprietor.

54,195. When did they go there?—About the year 1844, or thereabout.

54,196. Do you remember that?—Yes, I remember it well.

54,197. And they were helped by the proprietor?—The proprietor helped them to build the houses, and they trenched and ploughed and made up the land themselves the best way they could.

54,198. What size of holdings had they?—One of them between grazing and arable has about 40 acres, and he keeps a pair of horses. That is the man nearest me. Farther west, one of them has one horse, and another has two horses, and they help each other mutually.

54,199. Is there much grazing attached to these places?—No, not much.

54,200. And is the little grazing they have occupied individually, or in common?—Individually; every one has his own croft.

54,201. Would you direct our attention to them as examples of fairly comfortable small tenants?—Well, with the assistance of outside labour obtained here and there and in the lowlands, they just make a living,—not a very extravagant living.

54,202. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I wish to ask you one or two questions about the six crofters you said were formerly on Clair. What price would they be getting for their stock in former days?—I am unable to give you the figures, but prices were then, I believe, fully better than they are now.

54,203. And you have said that these people depended more upon the prices they got for their cattle and sheep than upon crops?—Yes.

54,204. Therefore, if they were replaced there now, under similar circumstances, they would find it harder to earn a livelihood, owing to the fall in prices for stock?—Oh, yes; prices are lower, and labour is very expensive now.

54,205. Mr Sutherland.—And are rents not lower than they were?—There are no rents at all now: Clair is all in Major Jackson's own hands.

54,206. I mean everywhere?—Yes, generally they are.

54,207. So that the matter could be put right by making the rent lower?—Yes, it might; certainly, the rents might be lower. I got 25 per cent. of a reduction myself.

54,208. What use is the land in Clair put to?—Sheep-raising.

54,209. Is there any at all in cultivation?—None except what the shepherd has.

54,210. Where is his croft?—At the east of Clair, at Bogriach, on Fannyfield.

54,211. Do you ever see his crops?—Oh, yes.

54,212. Has he good crops?—Very late.

54,213. But he crops his land always?—I believe Major Jackson ploughs it and tills it for him.

54,214. As long as these former tenants were there, did they continue to crop the land?—They cropped it regularly.

54,215. But when they left?—It was put under sheep.

54,216. And allowed to run out?—Allowed to run out.

54,217. Have you known snow to be on the corn there when there was no snow on corn elsewhere?—Yes, I have seen snow there, when there was not a particle of snow at my place.

54,218. What is your place?—Cnocan-Caoirinn.

54,219. How far is Clair from the sea, in a straight line?—In a straight line, as the crow flies, it will be about 4 or 5 miles.

54,220. And what is the height?—Between 600 and 700 feet, I would say.

54,221. And the crop, you say, was destroyed several years?—Yes, several years. It was very seldom they could get their crop to come to maturity, except that they would make meal and sell it.

54,222. What else could they make of it?—They could sell it if it were saleable.

54,223. What better could you do with oats or barley than make it into meal?—When it comes to maturity, it could be sold in the grain, without being ground, but it was very seldom they could sell it except as meal.

54,224. Is there any other sale for it in the district, except as meal?—Yes, for other purposes, such as feeding horses.

54,225. But if it is good enough for people to make meal of, is it not good enough for horses' food?—Yes, certainly.

54,226. Are these the only two places that you know?—There is one other place at the back of Swordale, called Rhidorroch.

54,227. What have you to say about that?—That is under sheep.

54,228. Is it a late place?—It is a very late place; it does not lie so high as Clair, but it is very late.

54,229. Is there any other place you would like to speak of?—There is a place called Bog-an-Turaidh, which was very late also,—as late as Clair; I have seen three tenants there.

54,230. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Which is the higher,—Clair, or Strath-Rusdail on Sir Kenneth Matheson's property?—I would fancy Clair was higher, but Strath Ruasdail has a better climate. I don't think it is as high as Clair; you go down to Strath-Rusdail from Ardross.

54,231. Which is the higher,—Clair, or Boith on the Novar Estate?—I would fancy they would be about the same height, but Boith, again, has a very cold climate too.

54,232. But the tenants of Novar at Boith are fairly comfortable, are they not?—They are trying to make a living, but they have not much to spare.

54,233. Still, they make a living, and they are paying their rents?—Paying their rents regularly as far as I know.

54,234. They are very much exposed to the north?—Yes, and the land has a cold undersoil.

54,235. Is there any reason why tenants should not thrive in Clair as well as they actually do in Boith?—Perhaps they might.

54,236. And the tenants in Clair you say were able to make a comfortable living?—Well, they were making a living, certainly.

54,237. Were they able, some of them, to lay money by?—I am afraid they would not be able to lay by much.

54,238. Were there not some that saved a good deal there?—There were some that were there for a long time, and they went away with a little money.

54,239. If they had stayed longer and then gone away, they would have had more money?—I don't know that they would.

54,240. The Chairman.—What rent do you pay?—£180.

54,241. Do you hold on a nineteen years' lease?—Yes.

54,242. Who is your landlord?—Sir Hector Munro of Fowlis.

54,243. You are not desirous of increasing your holding?—No, I have plenty.

54,244. You have a special knowledge of anatomy, I believe?—I have some knowledge.

54,245. Mr H. V. Maccallum, Solicitor, Inverness, agent for Major Jackson of Swordale.—Do you know well the district of which you have spoken?—I should know the district very well.

54,246. Looking to the general prosperity of the district as it is at present, do you think it would be better to have six small crofters on Clair, or to have a resident proprietor, as now, living there, and spending his money there? Which do you think would be better for the district as a whole?—Well, it would add to the population.

54,247. What would add to the population?—That six families should be in Clair.

54,248. But you told us that they were 600 or 700 feet above sea level, and that they were very uncomfortable?—No, I don't say they were very uncomfortable.

54,249. Mr Sutherland.—You were not asked any questions such as were sufficient to identify you. Do you represent anybody but yourself?—No person whatever.

54,250. So that you commit no person to what you have stated but yourself alone?—No person else.

John Macdonald.

JOHN MACDONALD, senior, Evanton (70)—examined.

54,251. The Chairman.—What is your occupation?—I am a tailor to trade.

54,252. Are you appearing here as an individual, or as a delegate?—I got a letter asking me to attend here.

54,253. Your name was sent in to the Secretary, and he sent you a notice of the day and hour of meeting, I suppose?—Yes.

54,254. What is it you wish to say regarding land?—I will answer any question I may be asked.

54,255. Are there any lands in this vicinity of which you have a special acquaintance?—I am acquainted with most of the land that Mr Munro mentioned to you.

54,256. Do you know a place called Clair?—Yes.

54,257. And do you also know Rhidorroch and Bogriach?—Yes.

54,258. Did you know these places when they were occupied by small tenants?—I have often worked in their houses.

54,259. But are you a judge of land?—Somewhat.

54,260. Have you a farm at present?—I have an allotment.

54,261. What is the extent of it?—Nearly an acre.

54,262. What have you to say about these places that I mentioned,—are they suitable for re-occupation?—The people that were there were well-to-do.

54,263. They had some stock I suppose of cattle and sheep?—Yes.

54,264. And they depended for their rent mainly upon their stock?—I could not say.

54,265. Have you sufficient experience of land to enable you to say whether these places could be re-occupied by crofters, profitably or advantageously?—Oh, they had good times, in my time.

54,266. You are referring us to the times when persons did live there, but what is your own judgment on the matter?—The land is good.

54,267. Do you mean that it is land suited for growing corn and potatoes and turnips and barley?—Well, I have seen very good corn in it; at the time when the farmers were evicted, I have bought very good corn in it.

54,268. But is the land there of such a quality and extent that a number of crofters could be settled there who could live by means of their holdings?—I cannot say.

54,269. Are there any other lands of which you have knowledge except those you have mentioned?—There are some lands in Montgerald,—a place called Fliuchairdh.

54,270. Was it at one time occupied by crofters?—A part of it was occupied by my father.

54,271. And were there any other tenants?—Yes.

54,272. How many?—Five in Fliuchairchd, and three in Tighaneirich.

54,273. Is there any other place?—No, I don't know except Fowlis estate.

54,274. The land you have mentioned is now, I suppose, under grazing?—It is.

54,275. Is it suitable for re-occupation, do you think?—More suitable than Clair.

54,276. Have you a strong opinion about Clair, or are you doubtful about it?—I know Clair for a long time. Dingwall. John Macdonald.

54,277. But you are comparing Clair unfavourably with those two other places; do you think Clair is really a suitable place for re-occupation?—It is a while since I have seen Clair.

54,278. Are there any other lands you can mention besides these?—None but those that have been already mentioned,—those of Wyvis and the others.

54,279. You know all those that were mentioned by Maclennan?—Yes.

54,280. Do you think these are lands that we ought to consider?—Yes.

54,281. But, as I understand, you are offering your view mainly upon this, that, in your recollection, all or some of these lands were formerly occupied by crofters or small tenants?—Yes.

54,282. And that, according to the best of your recollection, they were in pretty good circumstances?—Yes.

54,283. On that account you recommend them for our consideration?—Yes.

54,284. But you do not offer any independent judgment as to whether they should be re-occupied or not?—I do not.

54,285. Mr Shaw Stewart.—By whom was your name sent in to the Secretary to give evidence?—I cannot say.

54,286. Your name must have been sent in by some one?—I cannot say, unless Mr John Macrae here can tell. [Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—I have authority for stating that Mr John Macrae, at that time General Secretary of the Highland Land League, sent in the name of this witness as a suitable person to give evidence.]

54,287. I am told that Mr John Macrae sent you here. Who is Mr John Macrae?—This gentleman here. [Pointing to him]. [Mr John Macrae.—I am here; it was not I who sent him here, I simply gave his name to the Secretary of the Commission as a suitable witness in my opinion.]

54,288. Who is Mr John Macrae?—I don't know who he is; he is present there.

54,289. Is he Secretary of the Land League?—I cannot tell.

54,290. You do not know whether he is Secretary of the Land League or not?—I think the Secretary now is Mr William Mackenzie; he sent the letter I got.

54,291. You don't know very well, then, why you are here?—Just because I got this letter to attend.

54,292. Are you a member of the Land League?—Of course, I am fond of it.

54,293. Did you subscribe to its funds?—They did not ask me.

54,294. The Chairman.—Mr Macrae was formerly Secretary of the Land League? [Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—No, but he was of the County Association.]

54,295. Mr Macrae thought we would like to have some evidence before us, and he sent in your name, I suppose, as that of a suitable witness; and our Secretary, Mr Mackenzie, having got your name, sent you an intimation of the day, place, and hour of sitting; is that the way of it?—Yes.

54,296. But you are not here, as I understand, as a delegate representing any public meeting of crofters, but as an individual whose name we got in the manner I have described?—Yes.

54,297. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Did you know James Mackay, who was evicted from Clair?—Yes, and I also knew his father, William Mackay.

54,298. Where did he go when he was evicted from Clair?—He went to Stratherrick.

54,299. And did they take a large farm there?—Yes.

54,300. Immediately after they were sent away from Clair?—Yes.

54,301. Do you know Kildermorie [Cille-Mhoire]?—Yes.

54,302. What tenant is there now?—Mr Shoolbred.

54,303. It is the headquarters of the deer forest?—Yes.

54,304. Do you remember a number of small tenants being there at one time?—Only one I knew of.

Dingwall. — John Macdonald.

54,305. Do you know that the son of one of them was Donald Ross, who was Inspector-General of Schools for South Africa?—I knew his father, I believe.

54,306. And you know that the son attained to that position?—I do not know the son.

54,307. But you knew that he held that honourable position?—I heard of it.

54,308. Did the crofters leave Kildermorie of their own accord, or were they evicted?—I don't believe they were evicted.

54,309. Did they leave of their own will?—I think so. I think this man, Ross, came to Alness,—I cannot say whether he was evicted or not.

54,310. But were they living comfortably there?—Very.

54,311. The crofters who were there?—There was only one crofter there.

54,312. Were there not other tenants besides him at Kildermorie?—Not one besides him.

54,313. How many tenants were there altogether?—There was only one; the place is now under game, and this croft is now the croft of Mr Shoolbred's shepherd.

54,314. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Do you pay your own expenses coming here?—Yes, will you pay them for me?

54,315. Mr W. J. Duncan, solicitor, Dingwall, agent for Mr Shoolbred.—Did Campbell, the late crofter at Kildermorie of whom you have spoken, leave of his own accord?—He got so much money for leaving the place.

54,316. He was not evicted?—No, he was not evicted.

54,317. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—He was bribed by £700, or bought out?—Well, he left it.

54,318. And he got the farm of Fowlis?—He did.

54,319. The Chairman.—He is better off now than he was at Kildermorie, I suppose?—I cannot say as to that.

John Matheson.

JOHN MATHESON, Grieve, Swordale (48)—examined.

54,320. The Chairman.—How are you engaged at present?—As grieve to Major Jackson of Swordale.

54,321. Have you a holding on the estate?—No.

54,322. How long have you been grieve to Major Jackson?—For nine years, and seven to Mr Munro, making sixteen years altogether in Swordale.

54,323. You have been with Major Jackson since he got the property?—Yes.

54,324. Then, do you know about Clair?—A little.

54,325. What can you tell us about it?—During Mr Munro's time I worked a croft for the shepherd there for five years. The shepherd had from four to five acres for the keep of his cow.

54,326. And did you help him to till the land?—The master tilled the land for him; that was part of his agreement with the shepherd.

54,327. And what had you to do with it?—I had the actual working of it, under the master.

54,328. What kind of ground was it?—Well, it was very cold clay.

54,329. Did it not produce crops that would compare favourably with others in the district?—No, I never saw a good crop come out of it in my time.

54,330. Are the crops there generally late?—Yes, they were always late,—from three to four weeks later than we were at Swordale.

54,331. How far is Swordale from Clair?—About 2½ or 3 miles.

54,332. And is Swordale on a lower level than Clair?—A good deal lower.

54,333. More than a hundred feet?—Yes.

54,334. Does the snow come earlier at Clair?—Yes, a long way before we have it at Swordale.

54,335. Have you seen it on the stooks?—Yes, I have.

54,336. More than once?—I could not say how often. I only worked it for five years, after which the shepherd voluntarily gave it up for his own good. He would rather get a bit of potato land and straw for his cows, than the labouring of the croft in Clair.

54,337. Mr Macleod.—I think you said you are a grieve?—Yes. Dingwall. —

54,338. Who asked you to come here?—Mr H. V. Maccallum. John Matheson.

54,339. You said you had seen snow on the crops at Clair?—Yes.

54,340. More than once?—Yes.

54,341. You have heard, I suppose, of snow being on the crops in other places?—Yes.

54,342. You have probably seen it elsewhere?—Yes, I have.

54,343. Are the crofters, at the present time, working any land, do you think, that is equal to the land in Clair?—There are no crofters in the district, except on the Fowlis side.

54,344. Are there any crofters in the district at all who are working land that is just as poor as Clair is?—Possibly it may be as poor land as Clair, but Clair has a colder climate.

54,345. Mr Sutherland.—What did you say was the distance between Clair and Swordale?—About 2½ or 3 miles.

54,346. And do they cultivate land on Swordale?—Yes.

54,347. And get good crops?—Yes, good crops.

54,348. Is it the same kind of soil as at Clair?—Well, it is clayey at Swordale, but it is a different clay, not so cold.

54,349. What do you mean by cold?—I mean a damper soil at Clair than at Swordale.

54,350. But all soil is damp until it is drained?—There are some damper than others.

54,351. Do you know the distinction between clay and loam?—Yes.

54,352. Is the one here clay, and the other loam?—No.

54,353. Are they both clay?—You would say that Clair is perhaps partly moss and clay, some parts of it, and some of it very cold, hard clay.

54,354. But there is a distinction between the two places?—Certainly there is.

54,355. Where does it begin?—As you rise up, it begins.

54,356. But I notice from the map that both places are about the same level?—I always felt it a good drive to go up to Clair.

54,357. But did you not say yourself that it amounted to more than a hundred feet?—I cannot say exactly.

54,358. Do you, as a practical man, mean to say seriously that a distance of 2 miles on the same level makes a change in the climate?—A big difference; I felt that when I used to go up in winter.

54,359. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Is it not the case that some clay soils absorb moisture sooner than others?—I believe it is the case.

54,360. Your cold clay soils have no veins, as it were, to let the moisture through?—No.

54,361. That is what makes them cold, whereas a better clay soil may consist of clay which has some veins through which the moisture runs?—Yes.

54,362. And that would explain the difference in many cases of two soils which are not many miles apart?—Yes. I have even seen a difference in fields which lay beside each other.

54,363. Mr Sutherland.—There may be temporary changes in different fields?—Yes.

54,364. Are both the soils you speak of clay?—Yes.

54,365. But different kinds of clay?—Yes, there is a good mixture of moss on some parts of Clair.

54,366. Parts of it are moss, and parts clay?—Just mossy,—maybe not exactly moss.

54,367. Is the moss above, and the clay below?—I think you could get maybe ten feet of moss on some parts of Clair.

54,368. You have worked it for sixteen years?—Yes.

54,369. You worked it for the shepherd after the people were away?—Yes.

54,370. Were you there when the people went away?—No, they were away before I went.

Dingwall. John Matheson.

54,371. And you did not see them cultivate it?—No.

54,372. You never saw any cultivation except on what the shepherd had?—Yes, the four or five acres.

54,373. And you say he ceased to cultivate it because it was easier for him to get the corn and straw?—Yes, he always complained that it was not paying, and he wanted to get potato land and straw for his cows; so he got that for a number of years instead.

54,374. You gave him the potatoes and the straw instead of giving him the land?—Yes.

54,375. And you saved him the labour and the trouble?—Yes, but he has a croft still lower down now.

54,376. And do you still give him the hay and straw and potatoes?—No, he works that croft.

54,377. Where is the new croft?—At Fannyfield, or what they call Bogriach.

54,378. How much farther down is that?—About a mile.

54,379. Is the soil there different?—Yes, it is different.

54,380. And at the same altitude. Where does he stay himself?—He stays at Fannyfield.

54,381. He has a croft at Fannyfield because he has to stay at Fannyfield?—Yes, but he gave up the croft before he left Clair.

54,382. He would not have to do the labour at all, but it would be far easier for him to get the straw and potatoes from you, than to get the land and grow it for himself?—Well, we made all the labour for him.

54,383. Do you reap it for him?—He reaps and thrashes; that is all he has to do.

54,384. At any rate, he has now a croft at Fannyfield, and is raising a good crop there?—Better than at Clair.

54,385. Is he satisfied with it?—I cannot say.

54,386. Have you had any experience in working a croft yourself?—I was brought up on a croft. My father had a croft, but not much.

54,387. Then, you did not see the crofters in Clair cultivating the land?—No, they were away years before I came.

54,388. You cannot say what kind of crops they had?—No.

54,389. Mr H. V. Maccallum, Solicitor, Inverness, agent for Major Jackson of Swordale.—When Morrison was living at Clair, did you give the land the same justice as you are giving at present to the Swordale land?—Exactly the same.

54,390. With the result that the Clair crops were very inferior to the Swordale crops?—Yes. He worked the croft in Clair on the five-shift system; we ploughed the land for him, and put down his manure exactly in the same way, but, of course, with his own cows' dung.

Charles Macdonald.

CHARLES MACDONALD, Amat-na-tuath, Ardgay (over 60).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

54,391. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes, about that: my rent is under £20.

54,392. Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—No, we did not apply.

54,393. Who is your landlord?—Sir Kenneth Matheson, and he is a very good landlord.

54,394. Mr Donald Macrae tells me you have come here to speak about the Heights of Strathpeffer, not about the place where you live. Are you here as a delegate, or as an individual?—I got notice from one, John Campbell of Duran, to come here.

54,395. But were you appointed at a public meeting, or did you just come because you got a letter from somebody?—I got a letter intimating the date of the meeting.

54,396. Were you appointed at a meeting of the Strathpeffer tenants?—I was asked to come here to attend this meeting; I heard nothing about a meeting.

54,397. I understand you are able to speak about the Heights of Strathpeffer?—Yes. I was born in Strathpeffer, but it is forty years since I left the district.

Dingwall. Charles Macdonald.

54,398. How are the lands of which you wish to speak occupied at present?—I do not know how they are occupied at present; the lands are common lands,—they used to have these lands in common.

54,399. Are the lands now under sheep?—Yes, Mr Shoolbred is the tenant.

54,400. Are they under sheep, or under deer?—Under sheep.

54,401. What is it you want to say with regard to these lands?—The tenants had that grazing to the top of Ben Wyvis, about fifty-five or fifty-six years ago.

54,402. The lands you are speaking of were held as common grazing?—That was the common grazing; the upper lands were grazed in summer, and they paid a separate rent for these upper lands. The lands they held in common were adjacent to their arable land.

54,403. But the lands you are asking our attention to are not old arable, but hill grazing?—It is all pasture, and some of it is not much worth.

54,404. And the whole of the land to which you are asking our attention is land on Mr Shoolbred's estate?—Not on his estate, but he has it as a tenant. It is on the Cromartie estate.

54,405. Are there any crofters near that pasture now?—Yes, the crofters are there, as they have always been.

54,406. Are there townships there?—The Heights of Strathpeffer.

54,407. How many crofters are there?—A great many.

54,408. Have they got hill grazing at present?—No, nothing of the kind, and they have not any since they were deprived of this commonty.

54,409. Do they keep any stock at all, then?—Oh, yes, they all have some.

54,410. They keep their stock upon their own holdings?—Yes, but they have no pasture.

54,411. Is there a desire among these tenants for hill grazing?—I understand so, and they have need of it, but they are as well off to-day as ever I saw them, for they have a good factor; they never had the like of him on the estate. My father was one of these tenants, and I was brought up there.

54,412. Mr Macleod.—Can you define the boundaries of this old grazing?—They had the upper ground as pasture, and they took in some cattle to graze there in summer; that was separate from the lands they held in common. The march is by Cnoc-a-vurich until it reaches Skiachmhor and the Tulloch lands. That is where we herded our milk cows; it is the march between the common and the hill ground, for which a separate rent was paid.

54,413. Can you give us the other boundaries?—They went up to the top of the hill.

54,414. Did it include all the lands with the exception of Garbat?—Yes, we march with Garbat, and Fowlis estate is on the other side, and Davidson of Tulloch lower down.

54,415. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I would like to have some idea of the character of the holdings they have there at present?—I have never seen the croft so good or the crofters so well-off as they are to-day.

54,416. But I mean as to the division of arable land and grazing; I suppose they have some grazing on each individual holding?—They have no pasture.

54,417. Do they keep cattle?—Yes, every one of them has cattle and horses. [The Secretary.—There were nine before the Crofters Commission, but none of them had any common pasture].

54,418. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Do you know Glen-Skiach?—Yes, I do.

54,419. Were there tenants there at one time?—There were; I don't know how many, but there were tenants.

54,420. Would there be half a dozen?—I don't think there would be.

54,421. Had they hill grazing?—There were two or three or four tenants; they had plenty of pasture, but they would not have much arable ground.

Dingwall.

Charles Macdonald.

54,422. They depended more upon stock than upon crops, did they not?—I believe stock would pay them better.

54,423. Did they leave of their own accord?—I cannot say anything as to that.

54,424. What use is made of the land now?—It is under sheep now.

54,425. Who is the tenant?—I think it is Mr Shoolbred.

54,426. A sheep farmer?—Yes.

David Mackay.

DAVID MACKAY, Heights of Fodderty (57)—examined.

54,427. The Chairman.—Are you a farmer or a crofter?—A crofter.

54,428. What rent do you pay?—Over £16.

54,429. Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—It was. [The Secretary.—The extent of the croft is 19 acres 3 roods 8 poles arable; 3 acres 2 roods 21 poles outrun; no common pasture; old rent £18, 4s. 6d.; fair rent £14; arrears £27, 15s. 11d.; whereof cancelled £7, 15s. 11d., and ordered to be paid £20].

54,430. Have you a statement to submit?—I have.

54,431. Kindly read it.—'At a meeting of my 'neighbours held in the house of Donald Macdonald, 'Heights of Inchvannie, on the 23rd August last,—I 'was appointed to give evidence before the Royal 'Commission here, with regard to the common grazing 'formerly occupied by the tenants on the Heights of 'Strathpeffer. Since time immemorial until about fifty-'six or fifty-seven years ago, we were deprived of it 'and it was added to the sheep farm of Glen-Skiach 'then occupied by the late Mr James Scott of Hawick. 'A number of the people are anxious to have this 'common restored to them and if any objections are 'raised as to the breaking up of the farm we would 'take it all as it stands.

'I wish further to say that there were five or six 'tenants who held the Wyvis grazings outside the 'common for which they paid rent, but that did not 'exclude them from their rights to the common. I 'desire to add that there were eleven crofters on this 'farm at one time. This is now held by an English 'sportsman from London, and that gentleman is now in 'possession of three deer forests:—Garbat formerly the 'summer shielings of part of the crofters; the northern 'eastern part of Ben Wyvis, formerly under small sheep 'farmers; and also Kildermorie, also under small 'tenants. We were told the County Council had asked 'Mr Gunn to go over the ground to mark the boundaries 'of this common with the applicants. I now give in 'two letters showing this, Mr Gunn did not give 'applicants a chance to go over the ground, but went 'over it with Mr Roderick Mackenzie. I should like 'the chairman to examine Roderick Mackenzie whose 'signed statement I now hand to you:—

'On the 1st day of June, 1893, the following men 'resident on the Heights of Strathpeffer:—Donald 'Macdonald, Heights of Inchvannie; John Campbell, 'Duran; John Mackenzie, Inchvannie; Donald Mac-'kenzie, Auchterneed; Roderick Macdonald, Bottacks; 'John Gillanders, Duran; Malcolm Matheson, Bot-'tacks; John Rose, Heights of Keppoch,—who were 'anxious to be made acquainted with the marches of the 'common formerly held rent free by their forefathers, 'having selected two men who were herding on said 'common when occupied by the people as their guides, 'viz.—Roderick Mackenzie, Bottacks, aged 65 years; 'John Mackenzie, Milnain, formerly of Slagcharich, aged '79 years. The march begins at the west end of the 'house of David Bryden, Bottacks, crossing the Gar 'valt at the Broadford or Beul-ath-Leathainn along the 'old peat-road until coming to Torran-biorach, a line 'breaking off from the road about 30 yards west of 'Torran-biorach; in a westward line along the north slope 'of Torran-Dubh, a line continuing westward at the north 'end of Allt-na-Clé until coming to the top of Druim-'an-eich-ghuirm, turning then northward crossing Bea- Dingwall.
'lach Road at the west of Creagan-nan-caorach about 30 David Mackay.
'yards west of a boulder, continuing northward at about '100 yards west of Creagan-nan-coileach along west end 'of two hare hills northern march, the burn or green 'bog at the back of big hare hill, eastward where the 'two burns meet east, still to Clach-na-Banamhorair, 'and as the water sheds the top of Cnoc-a'-bhuirich.

ALLOTMENTS ACT.

'DEAR SIR,—Referring to the application lodged by 'you under the Allotments Act on behalf of the 'Achterneed crofters which has been under considera-'tion of the Committee of the County Council, I am 'instructed by the Council to request that the 'boundaries of the land applied for be marked on the 'Ordnance Sheets you have lodged with the application. 'Please call for me and have this done.

'On the boundaries being so marked, I am directed 'to say that Mr Gunn will be prepared to go over the 'ground with the applicants, with the view of seeing 'the ground they want and considering whether any 'arrangement can be made to meet the application.

'With reference to the paragraph in the application 'to the effect that if a rent is to be imposed it should 'be a merely nominal one, and that in any case the 'applicants reserve their freedom of closing with any 'terms that may be come to, I am directed to point 'out that the Committee can only deal with the matter 'and correspond with the owner of the land on the 'footing that a reasonable rent will be paid for the 'land, and that if the applicants adhere to the condi-'tion that the rent must be a nominal one the Com-'mittee can make no further inquiries on the subject. 'Please, therefore, let me hear from you as to whether 'this condition is to be considered as withdrawn.—'Yours faithfully,

'W. J. DUNCAN.

'MR JAMES CAMERON,
Bottacks, Achterneed Station.'

Cromartie Estate Office, Strathpeffer,
11th October, 1893.

'DEAR SIR,—Thanks for your note of the 9th. As 'I am unable to trace on the Ordnance Survey the 'boundaries described in the application I wish to go 'over the ground with some one who knows them well. 'I have already asked Mr Roderick Mackenzie to show 'them to me, and he has kindly agreed to do so. If 'afterwards I wish to see a deputation I will let you 'know.—Yours truly,

'WILLIAM GUNN.

'MR JAMES CAMERON,
Bottacks.'

54,432. Has Garbat forest any other name?—Not that I know of.

54,433. There is a forest of Ben-Wyvis in the hands of Mr Shoolbred, and there is a forest of Kildermorie in his hands, but I do not see the forest of Garbat in the Parliamentary Return?—The forest of Garbat is on the Cromartie estate.

54,434. This is the official return made in 1891 of all the different forests in Scotland, and I do not see Garbat mentioned, but sometimes they go under different names?—I never heard of any other name but Garbat.

54,435. Is it an old forest?—It is not an old forest.

54,436. When was it formed?—I could not say how long it is since it became forest, but Mr Robertson, Achilty, had the grazing of it last.

54,437. When did Mr Robertson give it up?—I am not sure.

54,438. But it must be older than 1891?—Oh, yes.

54,439. How long have you known it as a forest?—I could not say how many years it is since it was made into a forest.

54,440. Have you known it for ten years as a forest?—No, it is not ten years.

54,441. Well, give us an idea how long it is; it is a curious thing it is not mentioned in this Return. [Mr Gunn, factor for Cromartie estate.—It was cleared in 1886. Mr Shoolbred may have made the Return and omitted it; it was occupied by him at that time].

54,442. It is entered in the valuation roll for 1893–94, as 'shootings and grazings, Garbat; Walter Shoolbred, London;' but if it was formed into a forest in 1886 it surely could not fail to appear in the official return of 1891? [Mr Gunn.]—It was cleared in 1886.

54,443. How does it come to be entered in the valuation roll as 'shootings and grazings' and not as a deer forest? [Mr Gunn.]—That I am unable to explain; it was always entered in our books as a deer forest.

54,444. Ben Wyvis and Kildermorie have been forests always since you remember? [Witness.]—Not Wyvis; I think Kildermorie has, as far as I can remember; but I am not perfectly certain.

54,445. But you do remember when Ben Wyvis was not a forest?—I do.

54,446. What was it then?—It was a sheep grazing.

54,447. Occupied by a tenant?—By tenants.

54,448. How many?—Four.

54,449. What are their names?—William Gray, George Maclean, Rhidorroch, and two Urquharts, father and son.

54,450. Had they four separate farms?—No; they had separate arable land, but they grazed in common as a club.

54,451. Do you know what sort of rents they paid?—I cannot say.

54,452. Was that land, in your recollection, ever in the occupation of crofters?—Yes, of these men that I mentioned.

54,453. Were they crofters?—Well, the arable land they held was not much above a croft.

54,454. Did they pay more than £300 of rent?—I could not say for the arable land.

54,455. What did they pay for the hill?—I cannot say; I was quite young at the time.

54,456. Where did they live?—One of them lived at a place called Eileanach, another at Allt-Dearg, one at Wyvis, and one at Rhidorroch.

54,457. Can you give me any idea of their rents?—No.

54,458. Then, all you desire to tell us is contained in your paper, I suppose?—Yes, I think so.

54,459. What were the lands referred to in that paper to which you asked our attention?—This was common ground.

54,460. Do you mean Ben-Wyvis?—Yes, part of Ben Wyvis: we had a piece there in common, not marked out. I have given the boundaries of what was held by the people as common.

54,461. And also Kildermorie?—No, we had nothing to do with Kildermorie. [Mr Gunn.—It is a different estate.]

54,462. What estate is Kildermorie on?—On the Novar estate; or it was, before Mr Shoolbred got it.

54,463. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to this common grazing, I understand it lies very convenient to the tenants of the Heights of Inchvannie and the Heights of Fodderty?—Yes.

54,464. Right behind their holdings?—Yes, just above their holdings.

54,465. And, according to what was read by the Secretary, you have no hill grazing at all at present?—No; there is a small patch between the crofts at the west side and a fence that was taken along when the last farmer got it before Mr Shoolbred. There was a fence erected then above the crofters, to keep them back.

54,466. There is a fence drawn quite close to them behind?—Not quite close; there is a small piece between the fence and the highest crofts.

54,467. You remember the official return that was read to us by the Secretary a short time ago, which told that you had 12 acres or so of arable land? [Mr Gunn.—19 acres 3 roods 8 poles].

54,468. The average would be 12 acres: how much outrun?—There is no outrun.

54,469. The average arable is much bigger than the ordinary run of croft brought under our notice. You say you have got no pasture?—Not worth speaking about; it is not worth 3d. an acre.

54,470. Are you able to fully utilise the arable land you have got without grazing?—We would be much the better of grazing; of course the one would help the other.

54,471. Would you be able, if you had got an outrun behind, to winter some sheep stock yourselves if you had them?—Oh, yes, we sometimes do winter stock for payment.

54,472. Was it the tenants in Inchvannie and Heights of Fodderty who had this grazing that you refer to as a commonty?—Yes, it was.

54,473. Can you tell us at what date the grazing was taken away from them?—I cannot be sure about that.

54,474. It is much longer ago than the formation of the deer forest?—Oh, yes; I think it was taken away before I was born.

54,475. And was it made into a sheep farm at that time, or added to one?—It was added to a sheep farm.

54,476. And that sheep farm is now a deer forest?—No, it is still grazing; it is still under sheep. Mr Shoolbred has it as a grazing.

54,477. Then it extends westwards until it joins the new forest of Garbat?—Yes, in the one place, at the upper end.

54,478. Now, supposing that part that you referred to, of which you gave us the boundaries, were added to your holdings as a grazing, how much stock do you think it would enable you to keep?—I cannot say.

54,479. Have you formed any estimate of the number?—I did not do that. It would benefit us a good deal if we could keep a few more horses. Some have only one horse, and they have to get the assistance of neighbours to work the croft.

54,480. Have the crofters there any sheep at all?—None, but what they can keep on the crofts, or a few pet lambs about the doors.

54,481. Do you think they are in a very favourable position to make the most of a sheep stock if they had it?—I think they would go a long way to meet it.

54,482. And the people are anxious that they should have that grazing added to their lands?—Yes, they are.

54,483. And it is adjacent to their present holdings?—Yes.

54,484. Would they be able to stock it, do you think, if they got it?—I think they would do a good deal themselves, but perhaps they would require a little help from the Government at reasonable interest.

54,485. Would not crofters with 12 or 19 acres of arable land be in a position to stock a grazing like that with sheep if they got it?—Hardly.

54,486. To begin with?—Hardly, some of them.

54,487. Even if they were not able to put full stock on all at once when they get it; supposing they were to get it on reasonable terms, would their stock not increase?—Oh, yes, their stock would increase, and they themselves would increase,—I mean in the way of money.

54,488. They would become men of substance?—Yes, that is putting my idea into better English; I have not very good English.

54,489. And it was to bring this matter before us that you were sent here to-day?—Yes, I was appointed at the meeting as told in the paper.

54,490. The Chairman.—You handed in two letters which have been read regarding the application under the Allotments Act for more land. Did anything more come of the matter after Mr Gunn's letter of 11th October, 1893?—Nothing whatever, except that, I think, Mr Gunn went along with Roderick Mackenzie to see the boundaries.

Dingwall.

David Mackay.

54,491. And did anything more come of the matter? Was there any allotment granted?—Oh, no.

54,492. Why?—I cannot say.

54,493. These letters are addressed to Mr James Cameron?—Yes.

54,494. How did they get into your possession?—They were handed to me to-day.

54,495. Who handed them to you?—They were in James Cameron's father's house till last night; John Campbell went for them and handed them to me in Mr Macrae's office.

54,496. Why were they handed to you; why do you produce them?—To show what was the correspondence between the tenants and the authorities.

54,497. But it was not a thing that you had anything to do with?—I had not anything whatever to do with it.

54,498. Were you one of those desirous of getting an allotment?—I was.

54,499. Then, were you a party to the matter in that sense?—In some degree, yes. [Mr Gunn.—His name appeared in the application for allotments which went before the County Council].

54,500. And the letters were given to you, I suppose, as a convenient medium for bringing them under our notice?—Yes.

54,501. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You said, in answer to Mr Sutherland just now, that you did not think those who desired this extension of grazing would be able to stock the land at first; is that what you said?—Yes.

54,502. Then, it would not be reasonable to expect them to pay a full rent for land on which they could not put a full stock?—I don't know about that; I would expect that the land would be rented according to its value.

54,503. But it would be a bad speculation for them to pay a full rent for land which they could not fully stock, would it not?—Oh, yes.

54,504. Therefore, they would not be able to pay the same rent for the land as a sheep farmer who could put a full stock upon it?—Well, I did not ask their views about that.

54,505. But I am asking your own views as to what you think would be fair and reasonable?—I don't know.

54,506. You must have some idea?—If the land could be got cheaper, of course, it would be more in their favour.

54,507. But we are sometimes told that the proprietor would incur no loss, because the crofters would pay the same rent as the large farmer?—Yes, if we could not get it anything cheaper than that we would have to take it at the rent the farmers pay.

54,508. Although you could not put a full stock upon it?—I suppose the stock would be taken at valuation.

54,509. But you have given us to understand they would not be able to put a full stock upon it at first?—No, I think they would try to keep the stock that is on. Not the stock that is on just now, but the stock that was on when Mr Scott had it.

54,510. But did you not tell us you thought they would not be able to fully stock it?—I may have done so.

54,511. Did you not say that?—Yes, I think I did.

54,512. Mr Gunn, factor for the Cromartie Estate.—You mentioned that you appear as a delegate elected at a meeting of the crofters of the Heights of Strathpeffer?—Yes.

54,513. Will you tell us how many of these crofters at the Heights of Strathpeffer were present at the meeting, and how many you represent?—I could not say how many were present that night; there were a good few of them.

54,514. It is very important that we should know how many tenants on the Heights you profess to represent.

54,515. The Chairman.—When was the meeting held?—On 23rd August.

54,516. Where was it held?—In one of the crofter's houses.

54,517. Was the house full?—Oh, no, it was not full.

54,518. Was the room full?—Oh, no, the meeting took place in the barn.

54,519. Well, was the barn full?—No.

54,520. Would there be a dozen there altogether?—I think all the applicants were there except one or two.

54,521. How many would there be altogether?—I cannot say.

54,522. Half a dozen?—Yes.

54,523. Not more?—There were, at least, half a dozen; there may have been more. [Mr Gunn.—Give us their names?—I cannot give their names].

54,524. Who was in the chair? Or did you just sit round in a circle?—We just sat round; Donald Macdonald was the chairman.

54,525. Was he there that night?—Yes.

54,526. And was he directing the proceedings?—Yes.

54,527. At any rate, be the meeting big or small, you represent all those who were at that meeting?—I do.

54,528. And you were delegated and appointed to come here and state their views as a witness?—I was.

54,529. Have you any reason to believe that those who attended that meeting represented a wider opinion than their own individual opinions?—Oh, they just represented themselves; perhaps there were one or two who could not be present but who had signed for the grazing.

54,530. How many were in that category?—I cannot say.

54,531. Mr Gunn.—Then, I take it that not more than half a dozen would be present?—Six or seven.

54,532. It is well to bring that out seeing that there are fifty-seven crofters on that side of the valley, eighty-one on the Heights of Strathpeffer as a whole, and fifty-seven on the north side of the valley. Now, with regard to taking the sheep stock over at valuation,—I think you distinctly stated that you would not be able to do so?—Yes, we would have to.

54,533. You understand that you would have to take them at valuation?—Yes.

54,534. Then comes the question, are you able to pay for them? Have you any idea of the number you would have to take over, and their value? Have you made up any estimate of what you would have to pay?—We have not done that yet; we do not know what number is on it.

54,535. Say that the proportion effeiring to that particular bit of ground were 300 sheep out of the 800 on the farm, do you think you would be able to find the money to pay for these 300?—Oh, yes.

54,536. You think you would?—Yes, I think we would.

54,537. Have you any idea what the amount would be?—I have no idea just now.

54,538. How do you think you would be able to find the money when you do not know what you would have to find?—The sheep would have to be valued first. [The Chairman.—You would have to pay according to the valuation?—Yes].

54,539. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Had you much conversation with the people about this common pasture before the meeting was held?—Yes, we often had conversations about it.

54,540. And was there a strong desire among the people to have it back again?—Yes; and as I said in my statement, if there was any objection to giving them a part, they would try and take the whole grazing as it stands.

54,541. Was that feeling among a large number of the tenants of the Heights?—A great many, especially those that signed for it: there are some old people who have no interest in it, and some widows.

54,542. And although the meeting was not a large one, do you believe that the resolution you arrived at was the mind of the bulk of the people?—Yes.

54,543. And you drafted a petition with the view of of sending it to Mr Gunn?—We did.

54,544. Did you get many names to it besides the men who were present at the meeting?—Oh, yes. I forget at this moment how many names the petition has.

54,545. Did you send a copy of it to the Secretary of this Royal Commission?—Yes, we did.

54,546. In fact, there were nineteen names to it?—Yes, I believe there were.

54,547. Were there many among these nineteen who were perfectly able to pay their own share of the common stock?—Yes, there are.

54,548. Is the number who could not do so very small?—Yes, I believe so.

54,549. If Mr Gunn made it easy for you to get the land, would it be an easy matter for you to buy up the stock;—that is to say, supposing one or two, or three of you were short, to raise the money from friends?—Yes.

54,550. Quite an easy matter?—Quite an easy matter.

54,551. Did Mr Gunn promise you that when he would go up to see the boundaries he would give you word, so that you might be there?—That is mentioned in the letter.

54,552. Did he promise to send up word so that you might send a proper man to travel the boundaries along with him?—I think he wrote to James Cameron.

54,553. But did he say anything to you?—Not to me personally.

54,554. Are you satisfied that he sent a letter to James Cameron?—I am not quite certain, but, as far as my memory goes, I think he did.

54,555. Did you appoint suitable men to go over the boundaries along with Mr Gunn?—We did not appoint any man.

54,556. Were you all to go?—I do not know if they were all to go, but some of them were to go.

54,557. Did Mr Gunn send word up when he was to go?—Not that I am aware of.

54,558. You used to herd the sheep and cattle when you had the common grazing?—They had the common grazing before I was born. I never used to be herding there.

54,559. Do you know of any crofter who had as many as fifty sheep when you had the common pasture?—I don't know about the common pasture, but there is one old man living who told me that he was serving beside my father,—one John Stewart, who remembered my grandfather having fifty sheep.

54,560. Have you to hire a park for grazing, near Castle Leod?—Some crofters have, for their milk cows.

54,561. You do not do it yourself?—No.

54,562. Are you troubled with the deer?—Those that are higher up, but Mr Shoolbred keeps a man there to keep the deer back in the winter time.

54,563. But still they find their way into your crofts?—Sometimes.

54,563a. Have you used every possible means for getting this land?—Yes.

54,564. You have taken all the steps you could think of?—Yes.

54,565. The Chairman.—You say, in your petition: '—The grazings referred to once held by the crofters of 'Strathpeffer now form part of the farm of Glen-'skiach, tenanted by Mr Shoolbred, in this county, and 'a full description of the boundaries with Survey 'Sheets Nos. 75, 76[4], 76[3], and 76[48], showing the same, 'is produced. The same is confirmed by two of the 'oldest inhabitants of the district, who, in their youth, 'herded on said pasture. Again, submitting our case 'we are yours, &c.'

54,566. What answer did they send you?—The answer was sent to James Cameron, I think.

54,567. In the form of the letter which has been read?—Yes.

54,568. Was that the only answer?—I believe so; I heard of no other.

54,569. And the matter never went beyond that?—Not to my knowledge.

54,570. Mr Donald Macrae.—Did you write down the boundaries very fully on paper?—Yes, that has been handed in.

54,571. And did you prepare a map with the boundary traced?—Yes. Dingwall. David Mackay.

54,572. Did you produce the map?—Yes, to the County Council.

54,573. Have you got it now?—It is in the Sheriff Clerk's office. [Mr W. J. Duncan, County Clerk.—It might simplify matters if I explained that the petition has not yet been disposed of by the County Council; it has still to come up after Mr Gunn and the crofters have had an opportunity of conferring together.]

54,574. Mr Gunn.—Do you work off your croft at all?—I did at one time.

54,575. How long is it since you have been at work off the croft?—Since Mr Stewart left Castle Leod.

54,576. He left only three years ago; before that time did you use to work off your croft?—Yes.

54,577. Where?—At Castle Leod and elsewhere.

54,578. You were, in fact, employed by Mr Shoolbred?—Yes, by Mr Frederick Shoolbred; but not by Mr Walter Shoolbred.

WILLIAM GUNN, factor on the Cromartie Estates, Strathpeffer (54)—examined. William Gunn.

54,579. The Chairman.—We shall be glad to hear the statement you have to submit?—'The Cromartie 'Estate, which comprises the three detatched properties 'of Strathpeffer, Tarbat, and Coigach, together with 'the smaller detached portions, Dunie and Tolmuick, 'extends in all to 138,000 acres or thereby, with a gross 'rental for 1893 of £12,600.

'There are in all 360 crofter holdings, occupying '1770 acres arable, and 32,200 acres pasture outrun, 'at a yearly rent of £1690.

'There are fifteen small farms, ranging from £30 'to £100 of rent; eight farms paying above £100 and 'under £200; and only five above £200, three of 'which are pastoral, and two arable. The whole 'twenty-eight farms pay a total rental of £3837, or an 'average of £137 each.

'It will, I think, be admitted that this gradation of 'holdings gives all classes a chance, especially the 'industrious crofter. The fact, that the crofters on 'the Cromartie Estate are in possession of very nearly 'forty per cent. of the entire arable area, and as nearly 'as possible one-fourth of the entire pastoral area, 'I hope, justifies me in expressing the belief, that the 'past policy of this estate has shown a considerate 'regard for the just claims of all classes of its tenantry.

'The Strathpeffer property, which is wholly in the 'parish of Fodderty, extends to 20,000 acres or thereby, 'of which about 16,000 is hill pasture, of this about '7000 is deer forest; about 2150 arable; and about '1850 under wood, green pasture, &c.

'The gross rental of Strathpeffer for last year was '£5732, made up as follows:—

'Farm Rents,	£1465
'Croft and Cottar Rents,	627
'Shootings,	2250
'House and Park Rents and Sundries,	818
'Feu-duties,	572

'There are in all eighty-one crofter holdings, 'occupying 770 acres arable, and about 250 of outrun, 'paying a revised rent of £593, or an average of '£7, 10s. per croft.

'I believe I am correct in saying that the crofters of 'Strathpeffer occupy now every acre of land that they 'ever possessed direct from the landlord, so far as 'we have any record, certainly for over the last sixty 'years.

'There is an aspect of this inquiry to which it is 'my duty to refer in the interest of my constituents.

'The gross rental of the Cromartie Estate for last 'year I have stated at £12,600. Out of this we paid 'for proprietor's share of rates and taxes, stipends, &c. '16 per cent. For the ordinary up-keep of the estate, 'exclusive of all outlays on improvements, 30 per cent. 'To this falls to be added for irrecoverable arrears, 5 'per cent. (I fear the percentage of irrecoverable

'arrears has been much heavier than this for some 'years back). This makes a total of 51 per cent., 'leaving 49 per cent. for the proprietor, out of which 'all improvements of a more or less permanent character 'had to be paid. But out of this gross rental of '£12,600 as much as £5500 or 44 per cent. was 'derived last year from shootings and fishings.

'If this source of revenue is cut away or very 'materially reduced the manifest result would be that 'public burdens added to the ordinary maintenances 'of the estate, would swallow up the entire rental, 'leaving nothing for the proprietor to live on, far less 'any spare money to expend upon his estate, or to find 'employment for his people. This is a state of things 'which would become inevitable not only on this but on 'most Highland properties, the chief mainstay of which 'is their sporting rental. During my own connection 'with the management of the Cromartie Estates, which 'commenced twenty-seven years ago, our improvement 'expenditure has been little short of £60,000, aver-'aging over £2000 a year—an expenditure which 'would have been impossible, so far as estate income 'was concerned, but for our sporting rental.

'On the Strathpeffer property our labour bill for 'more than twenty years has exceeded £1000 per 'annum. On our labour staff we employ crofters, 'cottars, and crofters' sons, and the same at Tarbat, 'where the expenditure is also very considerable.

'With regard to the application for a portion of the 'sheep farm of Glenskaich by certain of the crofters 'on the north side of the valley of Strathpeffer, I think 'I cannot do better than submit to you a copy of an 'application under the Allotments Act, presented by 'these tenants to the County Council in June of last 'year. (That application has been already before you). 'I must explain that on the north side of the valley, 'from whence the applicants come, there are fifty-'seven crofter holdings comprising about 500 acres 'arable and over 200 acres of outrun.

'Of this number only nineteen have signed the 'application, leaving thirty-eight or double the number 'who have not applied.

'Of the nineteen whose names are to the application, 'two are not tenants, although they reside on the hold-'ing. Four out of the remaining seventeen are in 'arrear of rent, one of them to the amount of £21, '10s., or three years' rent of his present holding. This 'is one of the very few tenants in Strathpeffer who 'had fair rents fixed in 1888.

'In my reply to the County Clerk I pointed out 'that from 1862 to 1872 Glenskaich farm was in the 'occupation of the late Duchess of Sutherland—a 'period when sheep farming was greatly more profitable 'than now, yet no application was made. In 1872, 'Glenskaich was let in conjunction with the arable 'farm of Fodderty for a term of fifteen years at a rent 'of £275, on the expiry of which it was leased to 'Mr Walter Shoolbred at a rent of £225, some 'portions having been planted.

'Mr Shoolbred at that time and until 1891, was 'lessee of Castle Leod, with the grouse shooting over 'Glenskaich.

'It has been stated that the applicants' forefathers 'were deprived of this grazing. My information is that 'those of their number, not more than five, who held it, 'could not agree among themselves about its manage-'ment and that to enable them to pay the very small 'rent then exacted—only £25—they were in the habit 'of taking in horses and cattle from other estates to 'summer on this pasture, and it is an undoubted fact 'that they were in arrear when they relinquished the 'grazing in 1834 and that the amount of the arrears 'owing for it, viz.—£41, 10s., had subsequently, 1840, 'to be written off as irrecoverable.

'This farm which formerly carried a Cheviot stock 'now carries a superior blackfaced stock of about 1800 'sheep, which are found better suited to the higher 'ground which runs up to the summit of Wyvis, an 'altitude of about 3400 feet.

'The portion applied for ranges from an elevation of 'about 700 to about 1000 feet above sea-level, the 'greater part being about 800 feet. To take this away 'would cut off a valuable part of the wintering ground 'and would not only ruin the farm as such, but it would 'compel us to clear all the rest of the farm to which we 'are very averse.

Dingwall. — William Gunn.

'Several miles of a march fence would be required at 'a cost of several hundred pounds, the expense of which 'would have to be borne by the applicants, who would 'also have to fulfil the obligations of the lease, and 'take over, at valuation, a proportion of the stock 'effeiring to the ground taken, which would also 'represent an outlay of several hundred pounds. Then 'they would require to employ a shepherd, and go to 'the expense of wintering their hoggs away, a very 'costly item in sheep farming and to make this outrun 'of any use for their cattle they would need to exchange 'the good class of cross cattle they now have for high-'land cattle, which would not pay them nearly so well.

'It would be very much more pleasant for all con-'cerned if this application could be complied with, but, 'I confess, I am unable to see any practical way out of 'the difficulty.

'I should here add that the rent now paid for this 'farm is £225, which is a full rent as things go. But 'the grouse rent over the same area for the last number 'of years has averaged at least £1000 a year, exclusive 'of the low ground shooting and of Castle Leod for a 'residence.

'As a grouse moor it is A1, and if we may take the 'general experience of shootings over small tenants' 'grazings throughout the north it will be found that 'the value of the shootings is very small indeed.

'On our west coast property we have practical 'experience of this. There the crofter tenants occupy 'some 30,000 acres of hill ground, the shooting rent of 'which is only a trifle over £100—not a tithe of what 'it ought to be.

'Garbat, which extends to 5536 acres, is 14 miles 'from Strathpeffer by the nearest road, and over 10 'miles across the hill, was tenanted as a sheep farm 'until 1886, at a rent of £183. During the same 'period the shooting rent was £215, together £395.

'The grazing lease having expired in 1886 we were 'offered a reduced rent of only £135, which was con-'sidered so inadequate that we were induced to enter-'tain an offer to clear the ground, on a nineteen years' 'lease, at a rent of £600 a year. Garbat, which lies on 'the north-west slope of Ben Wyvis, is much exposed 'to the prevailing storms, snow lying deep all over it in 'a severe winter.

'A feature of this ground is that all the best grazing 'is in the higher parts, the low-lying part abutting on 'the Garve and Ullapool Road being very narrow, and 'the grazing very inferior.

'The only bit of green land capable of cultivation 'was improved for a shepherd's croft in 1880 at a cost 'of nearly £30 per acre. I think it would be very 'difficult to find another improvable acre on the whole 'of Garbat.

'Tolmuick, an isolated portion of the Cromartie 'Estate, comprises about 1600 acres. It lies in between 'Strathvaich and Strathrannoch Forests, and, I believe, 'is practically the sanctuary of the former forest, the 'property of Captain Mackenzie of Ord.

'Prior to 1867 the rent ranged as low as £50 a year 'for both shooting and grazing. In that year it was 'let to Lord Dacre at a rent of £100. It is now held 'on lease in connection with Strathvaich Forest at a 'rent of £250. It is distant from Strathpeffer about '18 miles.'

(Signed) 'W. Gunn.'

54,580–81. We have already had a great deal of evidence of a kind similar to what you have now submitted, and I do not propose to examine you with regard to your statement in general, but there is one point I wish to refer to in connection with the forest of Garbat. The grazing land was cleared in 1886 because you could not get what you considered a proper rent; you were offered a rent of £135 and the former rent was £183 so it was turned into a deer forest. The forest has an area exceeding 5500 acres?—Yes, the forest of Garbat.

54,582. I suppose it became a forest in the year 1886?—It did.

54,583. Why is it not included in the Parliamentary Return of 1891?—I am really unable to answer that; I have no recollection of having been asked to make a return.

54,584. It seems a somewhat curious omission. Had you not other forests at the time? You were factor, I suppose, for the Coulmore and Drumrinnie Forests?—Yes.

54,585. And you made returns with regard to these; why did you not make a return in the case of Garbat?—I am really quite unable to answer that; it must have been a slip to omit it, if we made a return at all.

54,586. You must have made a return in the cases of Coulmore and Drumruinie; as far as Cromartie was concerned the Crown Agent in making up his return must have got his information from you?—I may have done so, but I have no recollection of it.

54,587. Where else could he get reliable and proper information if not from the owner's representative?—It is quite possible the application may have been made, but all I can say is that I have no recollection of it.

54,588. It is only three years ago?—Yes.

54,589. I may mention that on Friday last we had a strong statement from Mr George Malcolm, Invergarry, impeaching the accuracy of this very return. This statement rather staggered me, but it would appear as if some important lands had been left out of the return from whatever cause. The Crown Agent was, of course, obliged to depend for his information upon the factors and representatives of owners of land?—Yes.

54,590. But you are not able to suggest any explanation of the fact that Garbat Forest is not mentioned in the return, dated 4th August, 1891?—No, I cannot recall the circumstance in any way or remember having made any such return; but I will look up my correspondence in that year and endeavour to trace it.*

54,591. The forest had no other name, had it?—No.

54,592. It is a confirmation of what Mr Malcolm had suspected, viz.,—that the return is from whatever cause inaccurate?—All I can say is that if we had made a return we should certainly have endeavoured to make it as correct as possible, but I have no recollection whatever of having made one.

54,593. There must have been a return made in the cases of Coulmore and Drumrinnie and no return in the case of Garbat?—It is quite possible the return might have been made from Edinburgh or from the officials in London, but it is not likely it would have been made without reference to me.

54,594. So I should have thought, because you are on the ground and must necessarily know more about it than almost anybody else.

54,595. Mr Sutherland.—You stated that the sporting rent you got from the farm of Glenskiach amounted to £1000?—Yes.

54,596. In addition, I understand, to the rent you get as a grazing farm?—Yes.

54,597. What is the rent you get for the grazing?—£225.

54,598. And for the sporting subject you get £1000?—I put £1000 down as the sporting value of the grouse ground which is wholly over Glenskiach; along with Castle Leod we get a considerably higher rent, but that includes the low ground shooting, which I have excluded, and the castle as a residence. As a matter of fact, our rent for Castle Leod and shooting was £1400, and I took off £400 for the low ground shooting and the house.

54,599. Did you hear what Mr Darroch said to-day about the return yielded by sporting subjects?—Yes.

54,600. This, then, is a return for grouse shooting alone on a grazing farm and it exceeds the grazing value by several hundred pounds at least, nearly double?—Yes, that is so.

* See explanation given at Ullapool, p. 1425.

54,601. Have you reason to suppose that if you let this grazing farm as a deer forest you would get very much more than that for it?—I do not know that we would; we might perhaps, but, as I have said already, overtures were made to us to have it cleared some years ago, but we were averse to clearing more land.

54,602. Whatever may be the case in other places, here, at any rate, we have got a subject, which let as a grazing farm and as shooting, fetches as much rent to the proprietor as if it were let as a deer forest?—Yes, quite so.

54,603. Now, have you any reason to suppose, from your experience all over the country, that there are several other localities in which the same thing occurs?—I have no doubt there are, in some good grouse districts.

54,604. I don't suppose it would matter very much how many people were upon this ground, so far as the grouse shooting is concerned?—I am afraid it would matter a great deal.

54,605. Do you not know on the east coast of Scotland any place where there is as good grouse shooting upon crofters' moors as anywhere else?—I do not happen to know any; my experience is quite the other way.

54,606. But you would not be surprised if I were to give you very explicit instances of that?—On the east coast of Sutherland and Caithness I could quite imagine it; that is a particularly good grouse country. Where the small tenants' ground happens to be very low ground I have no doubt the grouse will come in from the high ground. [The Chairman.—To get a little corn?] But our general experience is that on crofters' ground grouse shooting disappears. They rarely keep a shepherd; each man is his own herd, and it is nothing uncommon to see a dozen dogs on the hill at once. We have had that experience on the west coast.

54,607. There you come under a different set of conditions altogether, you contrast what it was on the east coast with what it was on the west, and I was going to bring that point under your notice. You stated that on crofters' ground on the west coast there were fewer grouse?—Yes.

54,608. Do you attribute that poverty of grouse to the fact of the land being in the occupation of the crofters, or of its being on the west coast?—To its being in the possession of crofters, because on adjacent land farmed by farmers properly burnt and attended to, and where care is taken of the grouse, the shooting is superior.

54,609. On the west coast?—Yes, in our own district of Coigach.

54,610. How do you account then for this statement of mine, that on the east coast I could point out to you, in the valuation roll, shootings on crofters' ground which are very much sought after?—I cannot explain it; I can only say it is not my experience.

54,611. But is it within your knowledge?—No, it is not even within my knowledge.

54,612. Do you know Rogart in Sutherland?—No; I have passed through it, but I have never been off the railway there.

54,613. Are you aware that Rogart has the most valuable grouse shootings in Sutherland?—No, I was not aware of that.

54,614. And that it is very thickly peopled with small tenants?—Has it always been under tenants?

54,615. Yes, within my memory, at any rate, and much longer than that. I presume, you brought it as an argument against the people of Strathpeffer getting back this grazing that the tenants who had it before did not agree about the management of it?—There were just four or five of their number, and that is my information got from the people themselves, who are now living.

54,616. Do you state that as a justification for taking it from them or as a difficulty that might be likely to occur again?—It merely explains why I suppose they were not able to pay their rent, and how the place fell into the proprietor's hands.

54,617. He settled the quarrel by taking the land into his own hands?—Yes, and wiped off the arrear of rent, which was irrecoverable.

54,618. He wiped off the arrears and then deprived them of it?—Well, of course, he could not go on leaving them with land that they were unable to pay a rent for,—especially such a small rent.

54,619. Do lessees of deer forests ever quarrel, do you know?—I am unable to say.

54,620. Have you ever known of it in your experience?—No, I have not.

54,621. You have never seen law-suits taking place about deer forests?—Oh, yes, I have seen law-suits about them.

54,622. So that disagreements are not peculiar to crofters or small holders?—Well, I think disagreements in the case of lessees of deer forests are exceptional, while the other are very common.

54,623. Do you know of law-suits regarding deer forests, which were a thousand times more expensive than all the quarrels crofters ever had?—That may be.

54,624. It is within your knowledge, is it not? The case is notorious?—Yes, I am aware of that case.

54,625. You sought credit for the management of the estate for the distribution of the land; far be it from me to say that you are not entitled to full credit compared with some distributions we have heard of.—I might have mentioned in confirmation of that a very extensive reclamation which was carried out on this estate in 1848 or 1850 at Knockfarrel where 150 acres were reclaimed by the proprietor at a cost of nearly £3000.

54,626. How was the land on the opposite side reclaimed?—Most likely by the tenants themselves gradually.

54,627. It is a most striking example of good cultivation, looking at it from a distance. Could you give us any information as to how it was carried out?—I am really unable to say; it was long before my time. There has been really very little reclaimed within the last 50 years. It is a feature of the Heights of Strathpeffer that the land on the north side facing the south, although high, is very good. There is some of it bad, but there is a great extent of good deep loam.

54,628. How long was the reclamation on the right-hand side as you go up, in being done?—It is impossible for me to say, perhaps 50 or 60 years ago.

54,629. Do you know if it was done under any security of tenure?—It would be probably on improving lease I should imagine, but as to that I cannot be certain.

54,630. They did not hold by lease, did they, previous to the passing of the Crofters Act?—Yes, they did; they all had leases.

54,631. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—How is the forest of Garbat returned in the valuation roll?—I have not the roll to refer to, but I think I heard the Chairman say that it was entered as grazings and shootings; if that is the case it is quite a slip. It is well known it is a deer forest.

54,632. The entry on p. 305 of the valuation roll is as follows:—'Shootings and grazings, Garbat, Walter 'Shoolbred, 10 Connaught Place, Hyde Park, London, 'W., tenant; rent £600, 2s.' Have you any explanation of that?—No, I can offer no explanation: it is quite beyond my recollection, having made any return in 1891.

54,633. But you remember making a return, no doubt, to the County Assessor?—Yes, the assessor gets a yearly return,—at least, it is simply revised if there is no alteration.

54,634. But you are responsible for the return made to the assessor?—Yes.

54,635. You are responsible for this deer forest being entered in the valuation roll as 'shootings and 'grazings?'—Very likely.

54,636. Not very likely, but certainly?—Yes, it may be so: I have no doubt it is. It has been entirely a slip; I quite see it ought to have been entered as a forest.

54,637. So that we find slips in the valuation roll as well as in the return that was made to Parliament?—Doubtless, we will find slips in very many things, unfortunately.

54,638. Mr Munro.—Mr Darroch in his paper says: '—I have, for a long time, been of the opinion that 'crofters had the first equitable claim to arable land 'lying near congested districts'; do you agree with that opinion, Mr Gunn?—Yes, to some extent I do.

54,639. I suppose you have heard that the crofters in the Heights of Fodderty and around Strathpeffer consider their holdings somewhat inadequate?—Some of them do, I daresay.

54,640. Would you be prepared to divide amongst them some of the neighbouring large farms, such as Brae and Fodderty?—Brae is not upon our estate; Fodderty is, and if you can produce a feasible scheme by which so desirable a thing can be accomplished without loss to the proprietor then I certainly say let it be done. But Fodderty farm is in a state of high cultivation, and is very fully equipped with costly buildings; and the question comes to be if you reduce its area what are you to do with these offices?

54,641. I am aware that Fodderty farm is in the condition you now represent it to be, and is an admirably conducted farm; but you have no general objection to giving land contiguous to crofts?—My plan would be this; I think that if crofters are to be assisted, they should be assisted by Government; and they should purchase estates when these come into the market, and not displace existing tenants who are doing well where they are.

54,642. If an experiment were to be made in that direction, you propose that the Government should step in and buy the land and experiment upon it?—Yes, that is my view.

54,643. That is in one shape, a scheme of land nationalisation?—Well, it may be that, but I think it would cure itself in time.

54,644. Mr Darroch also indicated an opinion that crofters might, with advantage to themselves and probably to others, be taken from some of the parts in the west coast and planted on the arable lands further south,—a scheme of migration, in short?—Yes.

54,645. Would you approve of a suggestion of that sort?—Yes, on the same principle that I have already stated, that the risk should not rest entirely with the proprietor.

54,646. But that the Government should first acquire the lands and then experiment upon them in that way?—Quite so.

HENRY VARY MACCALLUM, Solicitor, Inverness (34)—examined. Henry Vary Maccallum

54,647. The Chairman.—You appear on behalf of Major Jackson of Swordale?—Yes.

54,648. I understand he is not very well at present?—No, he is not. I am instructed by Major Jackson to make the following short statement.—'The estates of 'Swordale and Clare consist of 3823 acres, of which 60 'or 70 acres are turned up every year, on the Swordale 'portion. The Clare portion contains about 500 acres 'grass, which Major Jackson has limed and manured 'at considerable expense. The height of this portion 'above sea-level averages about 700 feet, and about '2345 acres is hill outrun, whereof about 1000 acres are, 'owing to their great height, only available for seven 'months in the year for pasture,—that is, for breeding 'sheep, as it does not pay in these times to keep a 'wedder stock.

'From experiments made by Major Jackson, he 'found that the farther west he tilled his land, the less 'was the return of grain. Major Jackson considers 'that in no way could the land on this estate support 'in comfort more mouths than it does at present. The 'size laid down by the Napier Commission for a pas-'toral croft was 10 acres arable and 250 outrun. Major 'Jackson now employs, besides unmarried workers on 'outside work, fifteen families, who, if they received 'land according to this calculation, would require 150

Dingwall. Henry Vary Maccallum.

'acres arable and 3750 outrun, a total acreage of 3900 'acres,—a quantity greater than this small estate con- 'tains, leaving, in fact, not a scrap of land for himself. 'Were land appropriated from this estate, it would 'compel him to dismiss families now in his employment, 'for whom he has the greatest respect and friendship.

'In 1885, Major Jackson wished to purchase a small 'estate to be farmed by himself, and on the strength 'of a letter from Mr Munro of Lemlair, dated 26th 'February, 1885, a certified excerpt from which is 'produced, he purchased Swordale. At the date of this 'purchase, there was no resident landlord on the 'property, and there were only twelve people employed 'on the estate, at an annual wage of £288, 15s., besides 'perquisites. Now, there is a resident proprietor, who 'lives all the year round on the property, employing 'twenty-five people outside, at a wage of £751, not in- 'cluding perquisites. There are besides eighteen people 'living or employed in the mansion-house; and in addi- 'tion to this, at many periods in the year, a number of 'outside labourers are employed. I would further state 'that not taking into consideration the building of the 'mansion-house, nearly £20,000 has been spent by 'Major Jackson since he came to Swordale, ten years 'ago.

'Major Jackson wishes me to add that he considers 'the parish of Kiltearn one of the most prosperous in 'the Highlands. During the last ten years, many new 'houses have been built in Evanton, and he knows of 'only one parish in the county where the poor-rate is 'lower. It is also the only Highland rural parish on 'the mainland where the population showed an increase 'at last census. In 1881, the population was 1182; in '1891, it was 1301.

'(Signed) H. V. Maccallum.'

4th September 1894.

Certified excerpt from a letter written by the former proprietor of Swordale, John Munro, Esq. of Lemlair, to Major Jackson, the present proprietor, dated 26th February, 1885.

'On payment of the price, I agree to grant a valid 'disposition and along therewith deliver a valid and 'legal progress of titles, and a search of encumbrances 'for forty years, showing the record clear of burdens. 'I guarantee that there are no crofters or cottars on, 'or having any claim to any part or portion of the 'estate.'—Certified to be a true excerpt.

(Signed) Randle Jackson.

3rd September 1894.

54,649. Can you tell me what is the expenditure per annum by Major Jackson upon his estate,—I mean upon grounds, gardens, and so on?—No, not definitely, but I shall be glad to obtain it, and put it in.

54,650. Is it the fact that Major Jackson looks in a friendly spirit upon the Crofters Act?—It is.

54,651. And would he be in favour of its extension to a wider area than it at present applies to?—Well, he certainly would be in favour of its extension to leaseholders; he has always said that he regarded the Crofters Act favourably, and that he thought it ought to be extended to leaseholders.

54,652. Is he in favour of its being extended to a larger area than the counties presently included?—I don't think that is a point on which I am in a position to speak.

54,653. Is he in favour of its extension in the matter of rent, to a higher rent than £30?—I have always heard him speak of the £30 limit.

54,654. In so far as he looks with a friendly eye on the Crofters Act, and is in favour of that legislation, we may take him as differing entirely both from Mr George Malcolm of Invergarry, and from Mr Duncan Darroch of Torridon?—I would answer the question, if your lordship would allow me, in this way, that Major Jackson has always been in favour of more people being placed on the land situated in the vicinity of congested districts, and he has shown that in the interest he took in the property of Knockrach, which immediately adjoins his own. About eighteen of the people of Evanton have been placed there.

Dingwall. Henry Vary Maccallum.

54,655. Who did that?—Major Jackson was the leading spirit, with Sir Hector Munro of Fowlis, the matter having come before the County Council.

54,656. As a member of the County Council, he favoured the movement?—He did: he was the moving spirit in the matter.

54,657. How many individuals got land in that way?—Twenty, I think.

54,658. And what is the extent of the holding?—They are in possession of the land now; they are tilling it now.

54,659. But they have separate holdings, I suppose?—Yes.

54,660. Do you know the extent?—It varies, I should say, from 4 acres to about 20.

54,661. Of arable land?—Yes; it is all arable land.

54,662. Were the rents fixed by agreement, or by the proprietor?—The property was bought by the County Council at a certain price, and the tenants paid down one-fifth of the purchase money. In point of fact, Major Jackson advanced one-fifth of the purchase price to them, as he wanted to try the experiment.

54,663. To the incoming tenant?—To the County Council: to enable them to buy this land, he became responsible to the County Council for one-fifth part of the price, which is required by the Small Holdings Act to be paid down when the land is purchased by the County Council. [Mr W. J. Duncan, County Clerk.—I may explain that it is not a case of tenants going in at all; it is a transaction under the Small Holdings Act, whereby the small holders actually purchase land from the County Council, paying the price in fifty years].

54,664. Now, you say that Major Jackson is in favour of the relief of congested districts by the migration of crofters?—I don't think I said that, my lord.

54,665. I thought you indicated something of that sort. He is in favour of congested districts being relieved?—He is, and of facilities being given for the acquisition of land in the vicinity of congested districts.

54,666. Then he would be in favour of crofters being migrated to new lands as nearly as possible contiguous to their present holdings, but more suitable than the lands they leave?—I believe he has suggested that the experiment should be tried first of a property being purchased, and the crofters being placed upon this land, to see how it would work, due advantage always being taken of the Small Holdings and Allotments Acts.

54,667. And he recognises that in many districts, such as the Lews and many others, there exists an acute condition of matters, requiring some vigorous treatment, with a view to the relief of the congestion?—Undoubtedly; I know that he recognises fully the gravity of the situation in the Lews.

54,668. And he is not at all in favour of what is called 'the land question' in the Highlands being left simply where it is?—No, certainly not; he fully recognises that it requires some remedy.

54,669. And therein he differs from some other proprietors,—we need not mention names?—Well, I believe he is credited with being more advanced than others, but I do not wish to draw comparisons.

54,670. But you say that he is much more advanced in his views upon the land question than his brother proprietors in the Highlands or the most of them?—Yes, I believe he is.

54,671. Mr Munro.—I think you mentioned that Major Jackson is in favour of putting as many people on the land as possible?—He has always said so.

54,672. In the light of that, would he be prepared to favourably consider any application that might be made to him to give the people the lands of Clair back again?—I believe he would. But I should like to add in regard to the lands of Clair, that the point which I endeavoured to bring out and which Major Jackson wished me to bring out, in my statement, is that, at present, there are more people living comfortably in Swordale than ever lived there before; and that is a fact that will not, I suppose, be denied. There is a resident proprietor, who has spent over £20,000 within the last ten years; and really, after all, Swordale is more of a small farm than an estate.

54,673. I am aware that it is not a large estate. Major Jackson took a considerable interest, I think, in letting the lands of Knockrash?—He did.

54,674. But that is not on his property?—No, it was a property that came into the market. He thinks there are always many properties that come into the market, which might be dealt with, before really taking any active steps to take property from people who possess it at present.

54,675. I am aware that you are all very willing to experiment upon other people's property?—But it is everybody's property, when it comes into the market.

54,676. I would like to see an experiment tried on his own property of Clair?—If it is a matter of experiment, I have no doubt that Major Jackson would be quite willing to experiment on his own land as well as on anyone else's: but these really are questions that I would prefer he should answer himself.

54,677. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—With regard to the experiment that was tried by the County Council, was it in answer to an application made by the people themselves that the thing was put in motion?—No, it was not. It was in this way—there is really nothing to hide in the matter:—The property of Knockrash fell into the market. Major Jackson held a second bond over it, and he was very anxious indeed that the experiment of putting more people on the land should be tried, as I have mentioned. He gave up his right to this second bond, and, as I mentioned already, he advanced or became security for one-fifth of the purchase price. He and Sir Hector Munro were the two real movers in the matter.

54,678. Then, was the property first offered for sale in the open market?—It was.

54,679. And failed to find a purchaser?—Oh, no; the County Council purchased it.

54,680. But I think you stated that it was offered through Major Jackson to the County Council, and I want to know when that offer came in,—whether it was after having made an ineffectual attempt to sell?—No, it was not.

54,681. How was it exposed in the open market, then, at all?—It was, I presume, advertised in the usual way. [Mr W. J. Duncan.—As clerk to the Council, perhaps I may be allowed to explain that the property was sold by a bondholder. Major Jackson convened a meeting of the villagers of Evanton, and suggested that that was a very good chance for an experiment being made. He advised them to apply to the Council, and get the place under the Small Holdings Act. Major Jackson generously gave the amount of his second bond back to the County Council, which, accordingly, reduced the amount payable to the County Council by the small holders. Thus he is advancing one-fifth of the price to certain small holders who are not in a position to meet it out of their own pockets,—the fifth that has to be paid down at once. The balance is payable, principal and interest, in a period of over fifty years. The property was sold first of all under the powers of a bond and disposition in security. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Who was the purchaser?—Mr Duncan.—The County Council, in virtue of an application from the district. The County Council purchased it in the open market.]

54,682. Have houses been built upon these lands? Witness.—No; all the occupiers of the land have houses in the village of Evanton, immediately adjoining the property; they are villagers in Evanton, who had formerly no land.

54,683. Is it your opinion, that in these experiments,—say when a sheep farm became vacant, it would be necessary to get Government aid for the crofters, in order to form new holdings upon it?—I have no doubt, from my experience in some districts, the crofters would be in a position to stock, but in other districts they would not, and I am afraid the majority would find the stocking of new holdings very difficult. To my mind, it is a very great difficulty.

Dingwall. Henry Vary Maccallum.

54,684. Mr Sutherland.—How many crofters are upon this property of Swordale?—There are none.

54,685. What population, then, do you speak of?—I speak of the people employed in the district.

54,686. Are there people employed on the estate who have no land?—It is practically a large farm, as I have explained.

54,687. Which has been consolidated, doubtless, before the present proprietor came to have it?—Yes. When he came, there were no crofters on Swordale.

54,688. You say he is willing that the people should be replaced upon the land?—No; I say if the experiment were to be tried in the Highlands I think he would be as willing to allow it to be tried on his own property as on any other; but his view is that there are many estates in the market already, without, in the meantime, taking the land from anyone.

54,689. But neither you nor he could contemplate any public action that was not of universal application, at least within the area to which it would apply?—Unless Government were to try the experiment of purchasing an estate in the market.

54,690. You go in for the nationalisation of the land?—Well, if you call it that.

54,691. We need not quarrel about the name, the thing is the same. You do not see any difficulty in the Government undertaking the management of land directly?—As an experiment. What I meant was the case of an estate coming into the market.

54,692. But, you see, estates could be brought into the market by legislation, which would have the same effect?—You could not then make any exceptions and it would no longer be an experiment.

54,693. If the State were to engage in transactions in land, that might very quickly bring every property in the country into the market: you have noticed that, I suppose, in the case of other countries?—It has not had that effect in Ireland, to a very great extent.

54,694. I take it then that the matter is only in the theoretical stage at present, in your mind and in that of Major Jackson. As regards the increase of population to which you referred, I took it that it applied to the parish, and not to the estate: do the estate and the parish coincide?—Taking it all over, I said the parish had increased in population during the last decade, and that applies equally to Swordale. Not so far as regards crofters, undoubtedly, because nobody can deny, as we heard to-day, that there were six crofters on Clair at one time.

54,695. Has the increase of population then taken place chiefly in the village of Evanton?—Oh, no; I think it is pretty well all over the parish.

54,696. With regard to the transaction entered into by the County Council,—I rather think that you are not yourself a member of the Council?—No.

54,697. But Major Jackson is?—Yes, he is.

54,698. Do I understand you to say that Major Jackson on the occasion in question forewent the amount of his bond?—Yes.

54,699. Was the first bond a heavy one?—Well, comparatively speaking, it was.

54,700. I wish to give Major Jackson the full credit for his action, but I would like to know from you if the margin of the second bond was large?—Yes, I can honestly say that it was. We went carefully into the matter at the time, and we found the probability was that if the property were sold at a good figure, he would receive the value of his second bond.

54,701. The full value?—Yes, the full value.

HUGH FRASER, Writer, Inverness, factor for Dunmaglass (50)—examined. Hugh Fras evidence, said that two tenants on the Dunmaglass estate had been evicted under circumstances of severity. To that statement I have to give the most unqualified denial. They were neither evicted nor was there any severity; in short, these two men and the proprietor were on the very best of terms, and are still quite friendly: they had a very good feeling in regard to the whole circumstances of their removal and their stay there. Before I come to the correspondence which took place at the time perhaps I might just briefly say that Mr Sopper bought this property a few years ago, and has expended very large sums of money on the estate, and the labour being entirely local, all the people in the place were fully employed. The two houses which these two men occupied were on the private road leading to the lodge. They were thatched houses, built of stone and turf, and were common small 'black' houses which were in a very dilapidated condition; in fact, as compared with the effect of the improvements with which they were surrounded these houses became a disgrace to the place and could not be allowed to remain as they were. But Mr Sopper was very anxious that these men who had been so long on the estate should, if possible, not be removed, and with that in view, he made them the following offer. It is embodied in a letter addressed by me to these men on 17th September, 1892, and reads thus:—

Copy letter to Messrs A. and D. Macgillivray, Farmers, Achnaloddan, Inverness, 17th Sept. 1892.

'Dear Sir,—With reference to the recent conference 'between Mr Sopper and you and your neighbour, Mr 'Donald Macgillivray, in regard to your present hold- 'ings, which it is desirable to rearrange in connection 'with the general improvements now being carried out 'on the estate, I am to inform you that after the 'fullest consideration on Mr Sopper's part—specially 'with the view of retaining you as a tenant, he has 'resolved to offer to you and your neighbour in one 'holding all the lands on the north portion of Dunma- 'glass Proper, bounded as follows:—On the west by 'the march with Easter Aberchalder, on the south by 'the loch, policies, and river, to the present march of 'the Mains Farm, and thence along that march from 'the river northwards to the private road, and then 'along that road eastwards to the county road near 'the bridge, on the east by the said county road, and 'on the north by the march with Farraline. This new 'holding I now, on behalf of the proprietor, offer to 'you and Mr Donald Macgillivray jointly, or to either 'of you, subject to the lease thereof, containing the 'usual clauses applicable to such a farm, being approved, 'at a yearly rent of £110, which I am advised by an 'experienced valuator is a fair rent. At present you 'and your neighbour have 26 acres arable or thereby. 'By the above arrangement, the extent will be 32 acres 'arable, 19 acres out of cultivation, and 1000 acres of 'hill ground or thereby. If the offer now made is 'accepted I am authorised to say that Mr Sopper will 'build one dwelling-house and steading with suitable 'accommodation on the holding.

'This proposed arrangement, with its consequent 'large expenditure in buildings, is entirely out of con- 'sideration for you both. Had you not been so long 'connected with the estate the proprietor would not 'think of incurring the expense of these buildings— 'seeing that there already exists at the Mains more than 'is sufficient for all the lands.

'I am writing to Mr Donald Macgillivray in the same 'terms, and as Mr Sopper is to go south in about a 'week, and is anxious to have arrangements completed, 'please let me hear from you, as to the offer now made, 'with as little delay as possible.—Yours faithfully,

(Signed) 'Hugh Fraser.'

Copy Reply.

Achnaloddan, Dunmaglass, 21*st September* 1892.

'Dear Sir,—We received your letter of 17th instant. 'We much feel Mr Sopper's very kind considerations 'for us in offering to erect buildings an our account. 'Will you please convey our thanks to him. As one 'house and steading will not suit us, we have to decline 'the offer made, and hope that Mr Sopper will give us 'the usual privileges of out-going tenants, in taking over 'our sheep stock, &c. at valuation. The place would 'suit one of us, but we prefer being together.—Yours 'truly,'

(Signed) 'Alexander Macgillivray,
,, 'Donald Macgillivray.

'Mr Fraser,
'Factor for Dunmaglass, Inverness.'

That letter so very fully explains the whole case that I have very little else to say except this: after these men had themselves agreed to remove, and did wish to remove, and left with very good feeling, they asked the proprietor by letter, whether he would give them the advantages of out-going tenants. This Mr Sopper had done; he had paid them full valuations for all belonging to them, including sheep stock and everything else, and I may say that I am quite sure that the statements which were made before you the other day were not made with the authority of these two men, for I am sure the kindly feelings which always existed between them and the proprietor would not have permitted it.

54,703. The Chairman.—They got other holdings, did they?—Not on the estate.

54,704. But they were fully compensated for leaving?—Oh, fully.

54,705. How much did each man get?—There was a minute of reference fixing two arbiters to value the different things, and the result was as follows:—

Grass, fallow, manure, &c.	£27	and	£33	odds.
Sheep stock, . . .	431	,,	451	,,
Grain crops, later on, . .	38	,,	33	,,

The tenants were also permitted to remain in their cottages for another year, rent free.

William Allis Smith.

William Allis Smith of Glencalvie, Ross-shire (59)—examined

54,706. The Chairman.—You are proprietor of the estate of Glencalvie?—Yes.

54,707. Kindly read your statement.

To the Chairman and Honourable Members of the Royal Commission (Highlands and Islands, 1892.)

'I bought the estate of Glencalvie, consisting of 4583 'acres, by auction at Edinburgh, on the 15th of May '1890, from Mr Charles Robertson of Kindeace, for '£12,500. The estate was publicly advertised as having 'no crofters or tenants upon it. On taking possession I 'found that there were three squatters living in three 'dilapidated tenements:—one woman, Ann Ross, aged '90, in the receipt of parish relief; two women named 'Bella and Margaret Mackay living in a dilapidated house; 'and Bella Campbell also occupying a dilapidated house. 'These people were there on the estate without any 'legal holding whatever, but instead of evicting them, 'I have had built for them two new houses, have 'broken up ground for them and fenced it in with 'wire fence, and have permitted them to have a cow 'each, and fenced in a cow-run of 36 acres each, 'and executed a lease for their respective lives at 'a charge of one shilling yearly. Nearly three hundred 'has been spent upon the properties without charging 'the squatters with any of the outlay. Since buying 'the estate I have laid out £5000 in buildings, road- 'making, fencing and draining, employing Scotch 'lawyers, architects, builders, and artizans, thus em 'ploying a large number of local men for three years, 'and have also spent during the three years upwards 'of £3000 buying my provisions locally. I keep 'permanently on the estate a coachman and gardener, 'with his family, a gamekeeper, with his family, and 'two men at work on the estate (all of them being 'Scotchmen). The 48 acres of available land I have Dingwall. — William Allis Smith.

'surrounded with a mile and a half of deer fence, and 'I am cultivating and ploughing it up and find it will 'not suffice for keeping my horses, cows, &c. without 'buying extra food for them in the winter. It is my 'intention to stock the hill pasturage with cattle and 'sheep next spring. I have retired from my profession '(medical) with the purpose of making Glencalvie my 'home and farming it, having built a commodious 'lodge, stables, with coachman's house, keeper's house, 'walled kitchen garden, game larders, &c., and I reside 'there seven months of the year with my family, and 'have no intention of letting the estate, and it appears 'to me that it would be a great injustice if crofters 'were introduced by which any portion of the small 'amount of land capable of being cultivated were taken 'from me as there is not sufficient land available for 'my own personal use and that of my horses, cows, and 'stock. I regret that I was not made aware of the 'visit of the Commission to Glencalvie in November '1893, and most unfortunately had left Glencalvie the 'day before the honourable members arrived, otherwise 'I should have most certainly remained to make my 'personal statement at the time. I humbly, therefore, 'beg that the Honourable Commissioners will receive 'this statement and enter it into the blue-book, and 'bear in mind the large outlay I have made on this 'small estate with the sole purpose of making it a 'residential home for myself, and that all the land 'capable of cultivation I absolutely require for my own 'use.'

(Signed), WILLIAM ALLIS SMITH.

54,708. Mr Sutherland.—May I ask whether you were aware of the history of Glencalvie before you bought the estate?—Not the least. I saw the place advertised in a newspaper three days before I bought it. I came north to see an old gamekeeper and ask him whether he thought the estate would suit me; I then hastened back to Edinburgh and bought the estate. I only saw it three days before buying it, so I knew nothing whatever of the history of the property.

SIXTY-THIRD SITTING.

Poolewe, Ross-shire.

POOLEWE, ROSS-SHIRE, September 7, 1894.

Present:—

DAVID BRAND, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
MICHAEL HUGH SHAW STEWART, Esq., M.P.
ANGUS SUTHERLAND, Esq., M.P.
GEORGE GORDON, Esq.
REV. MALCOLM MACCALLUM.
HENRY MUNRO, Esq.
WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

Malcolm Urquhart.

MALCOLM URQUHART, Crofter, Sand, Aultbea (57). —examined.

54,709. The Chairman.—Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes. [The Secretary.—The croft is No. 27, Sand; area 4 acres 2 roods 30 poles arable; 1 acre 7 poles outrun; one share in township common of 820 acres divided into 21 shares; old rent £6, 3s. 2d.; fair rent £3, 10s.; arrears £18, 11s. 4d., whereof cancelled £14, 11s. 4d., and ordered to be paid £4.]

54,710. Do you know the land hereabouts very well?—Yes, I should know it.

54,711. What is it you wish to say as to the land in this quarter?—I wish to state that we are short of pasture for our cattle. Poolewe, Ross-shire. Malcolm Urquhart.

54,712. I see that you have 820 acres of township pasture?—Yes.

54,713. Have you no common hill pasture besides?—No.

54,714. What is the general character of the pasture you have?—What we have is pretty good; it is just a mixture of good and bad.

54,715. Would you describe it as good mixed pasture on the whole?—Good mixed pasture on the whole. It is pretty fair in quality, but too limited in extent.

54,716. How much more, do you think, would be required?—We are put in great straits, because our forefathers had Beinn-a'-Chaisgein for pasture, and all the eild cattle and horses were sent there in summer-time.

54,717. That was your summer sheiling?—That was our summer sheiling, and that left the grass in the strath below for later on in the season.

54,718. Can you give us any idea of the extent of the Beinn-a'-Chaisgein pasture?—I know the ground very well, but I can give no idea of its size.

54,719. Was it larger than what you have?—Far larger; we had it along with what we have now.

54,720. Where does Beinn-a'-Chaisgein lie from your township?—It lies in a south-easterly direction; south or south-east.

54,721. How have you done since you lost that pasture?—We were forced to send the eild cattle if we had any to other places to graze, and as to our horses each one sent his to Assynt or wherever he could get it placed. Others were obliged to sell their horses after the spring labour was over, even at half price, as they had no grazing to give them.

54,722. So that it was a serious loss?—Yes, it could not have been more serious.

54,723. How is that land of Beinn-a'-Chaisgein used now?—It is a deer forest.

54,724. Is it part of the Letterewe forest?—Yes.

54,725. It is included within the limits of that forest?—Yes, and no longer used for sheep.

54,726. When did that happen?—I cannot give the date, but it was before I recollect that we lost Beinn-a'-Chaisgein. It might perhaps be in my time, but I have no recollection, though there are some present who do recollect it.

54,727. And if you had that pasture restored, or similar pasture, would that satisfy the desires of the township?—Yes.

54,728. You are able to speak I suppose on behalf of the whole township?—Yes, I am appointed by them as a delegate to appear before you.

54,729. At a meeting held recently?—Yes. We were in such straits that we applied to the proprietor for hill grazing for our eild cattle and our horses, but we did not come to an agreement.

54,730. When was that application made?—About two years ago.

54,731. And what was the answer given?—There were certain conditions.

54,732. Tell me what it was that stopped the negotiation?—We agreed to the conditions, and then we heard no more about it. I for one signed the paper about the agreement.

54,733. Have you got that paper?—I believe it was sent in to the manager of the estate, Mr Stewart.

54,734. You have not a copy of it yourself?—No, it was sent round among us.

54,735. Was it signed by all?—I cannot say that it was signed by all, but it was signed by those who were put to such straits that they did not know what to do. It was signed by a good many, I know.

54,736. By the majority?—I believe so.

54,737. You send your stock at present, which used to summer on this place, to Assynt and other quarters. What does that cost you on the average?—Every horse costs £1.

54,738. And has nearly every crofter in the township got a horse?—Most of them have, but there are a good many who go to the market in the beginning of spring and buy a horse, and perhaps have to sell it at a loss when the labour is over, as there is no grazing for it.

54,739. And what do sheep cost you for this pasture?—We had to sell the sheep; I am not aware of any case where we send away the sheep. We sell them instead of keeping them on.

54,740. In fact, the want of that pasture produces a forced sale of the sheep?—We are obliged to sell the sheep because we have no place to keep them. I am not aware of any case where we send sheep to grazing. Then, we applied to the shooting tenant, Mr Perkins, and we applied to the present shooting tenant, Mr Laycock, and he would not consent to give us what we wanted. We wanted a bit of the forest that borders on the sea; it comes down as far as the seashore, and we wanted a bit for grazing, for which we were willing to pay a fair rent.

54,741. Where exactly was the bit you asked for?—Between the two rivers, the Little Gruinard and the Meikle Gruinard.

54,742. And sloping down to the sea?—Yes.

54,743. How far does the land go that you wanted from the proprietor?—About four miles, to Loch-a'-Mhadaidh.

54,744. That was the march of the land you wanted in that direction?—Yes.

54,745. What answer did you get to that?—If it would not take up too much of your time you could see the correspondence. I believe one here has the letters.

54,746. Who is it that has the correspondence?—Roderick Mackenzie.

54,747. Have any other townships besides Sand an interest in the 820 acres of grazing?—Yes, there are two townships called First and Second Coast that have an interest in it along with Sand; we have the pasture together.

54,748. The three townships of Sand, First Coast, and Second Coast have together an interest in this area of 820 acres?—Yes.

54,749. How many families are in Sand?—Fourteen.

54,750. How many in First Coast?—Seven.

54,751. And how many in Second Coast?—There are 18 between the two townships of Coast. [The Secretary.—The Crofters Commission dealt with 17 holdings in First and Second Coast, and 14 in Sand, and I believe there were one or two that were not dealt with.]

54,752. That makes 32 families. Have the townships of First and Second Coast any other grazing besides this 820 acres?—No.

54,753. So that the entire grazing which these three townships of Sand, First Coast, and Second Coast have is this area of 820 acres?—Yes.

54,754. Mr Shaw Stewart.—How do you manage your present grazing? Does each individual have a certain number of sheep, and look after his own sheep?—Yes, every one looks after his own.

54,755. How many sheep would each sharer have?—Sixteen.

54,756. Do they keep to that limit?—Some do, and others do not.

54,757. It would be better, I suppose, if they all kept to the limit?—Some have not so many.

54,758. How many sheep would you say are on the grazing at present?—The present grazing would not accommodate so many as that.

54,759. You mean that if you multiply 16 by 21 that would be too many?—That would be too many; ten a-piece would be enough for the present grazing as far as I can judge.

54,760. What is your occupation?—I am a crofter.

54,761. Do you go to the fishing, or to other work?—I have been a farm servant, I have been a railway labourer, and I have been at the herring fishing; anything that comes in my way.

54,762. Are most of your neighbours employed in the same way?—Most of them are.

54,763. Some fish and some go away to labour?—Yes.

54,764. Do they go to the south?—Yes.

54,765. Mr Sutherland.—Tenants from your township applied to the Crofters Commission for enlargement of holding, I understand?—Yes.

54,766. From the farm of Drumchork?—Yes.

54,767. And the Commissioners did not see their way to grant the extension inasmuch as it was to be taken from a farm that was under £100 of rent; is that the reason why you did not get it?—That is the reason, as far as I understand.

54,768. But the application to the Crofters Commission showed your desire to get more land?—Yes.

54,769. In answer to a question put to you by his lordship you said that the land taken from you first was before you remember?—Yes, but there was land taken from us within my memory.

54,770. What was done with the land that was taken before your recollection?—It was a sheep farm, and now it is a deer forest.

54,771. It was taken from you for the purpose of making a sheep farm, and that sheep farm was afterwards turned into a deer forest?—Yes.

54,772. Now, tell me about the second time your pasture was curtailed; when was that?—Every time the farm changed hands they would take a slice off; at every renewal of a lease, or at the entry of a new tenant to a farm, they would take a slice off what we had.

54,773. Then, you said there were 32 families interested in this 820 acres of pasture. Are there more than 32 families in these townships you have mentioned?—There are more families.

54,774. Are there any families that have got no land at all?—Yes.

54,775. How many?—I cannot say at present.

54,776. Are there ten, do you think?—I have no idea, I cannot say off-hand how many there are.

54,777. But there are some who have got no land at all?—Yes.

54,778. And, consequently, no interest in this 820 acres?—No interest in it.

54,779. The 32 families who have an interest in it are entitled to keep 16 sheep?—Yes.

54,780. That makes a total of 512 sheep. Will that area graze 512 sheep?—There are only 21 shares.

54,781. Then, there must be eleven families who have no interest in the grazing?—Yes.

54,782. That must be the number of families who have no land at all, these eleven?—It must be so.

54,783. Is there any desire on their part to get land?—I believe there is; I hear among them that there is.

54,784. Are any of them fishermen?—We are partly fishermen, the whole of us, and partly crofters.

54,785. But those who have got no crofts, are they fishermen?—Not wholly. There is not what I would call a fisherman who lives altogether by fishing among them all.

54,786. But do some of them go to the east coast fishing as hired men?—Yes, but that has failed now mostly.

54,787. Mr Gordon.—Where does your present pasture lie? Does it extend over to the Little Gruinard River?—No, there is a burn that comes down on the north side of the Gruinard.

54,788. What is the name of it?—Allt-Bad-an-t-sluig.

54,789. Now, the portion of the ground which you applied for does not include the ground between Badan-Luig and the Little Gruinard river; why did you leave that bit out?—Little Gruinard is a sheep farm.

54,790. Little Gruinard is at present occupied as a farm?—As a sheep farm.

54,791. Have you any idea of the extent of ground that you applied for, up to Loch-a'-Mhadaidh?—As far as I can judge it would be between three and four miles, or about three miles.

54,792. It would be rather less than 3000 acres I should think from the look of it. Now, will you tell me how you would propose to occupy that ground?—We propose to occupy the ground by putting our spare stock on it, our eild cattle and horses, in summer.

54,793. But this ground that you have applied for is three times the size of the ground you have at present; you would require to occupy it to some more profitable

Poolewe, Ross-shire.

Malcolm Urquhart.

purpose than simply as an additional grazing?—Well, if your lordships decided that that would be too much for us, of course it is not for us to say.

54,794. I don't say it is too much, but I want you to tell me if you are to apply for this ground, how are you to occupy it?—We will try and stock it; we will take it in shares.

54,795. Would you propose to stock it as a club farm?—We propose to stock it as a club farm and take it in shares.

54,796. Have you any experience of club farming in your present township?—No.

54,797. Is there any club farm in your neighbourhood?—No.

54,798. But so far as you know, yourself and your neighbours would be amenable to reasonable laws laid down for the management of a club farm, provided you got the land?—I don't think there would be any difference.

54,799. You would be willing to occupy this land under certain rules if you got it?—Yes, if we got it.

54,800. You spoke about the grazing of your horses. How many horses are there in your own village?—Eleven.

54,801. Is not that rather many? Are the rest of the crofts about the same size as yours?—I have a share and a half.

54,802. Don't you think eleven horses are too many to work 50 or 60 acres of arable land? Don't you think that keeping so many horses is a great loss to the township?—It would not be a great loss to the township, because when the time of the grazing comes we are forced to send them away.

54,803. When you lay down your crop?—Yes.

54,804. But you must keep them for a certain length of time?—Yes. Of course, if they were kept all the year round, it would be too many.

54,805. But during the time you do keep them, when you are laying down your crops, is it not a great scourge upon your cows and home cattle to have so many horses?—It is, but we cannot do without them.

54,806. Even if you got this land you would have to keep them?—Yes, during that time.

54,807. They would be the same scourge upon your cattle as they are now?—But if we got this ground the grass would be growing in the lower ground, and we would have more grass.

54,808. I would be afraid that if you got this ground it would only tempt you to keep more useless animals?—But there must be an agreement that we will not allow ourselves to keep too many. There must be a limited number.

54,809. Suppose you got the ground, do you think yourself and your neighbours would be able to stock it?—I think we would.

54,810. The Chairman.—I see that in the Order of 17th December 1888, issued by the Crofters Commission, reference is made to the farm of Udrigil which had been offered by the landlord to certain crofters. How does that matter stand now? Has the farm been given since then, or is it still occupied as a farm?—It is still occupied as a farm, but it is given to the crofters; the crofters have it. There are crofters settled in Udrigil.

54,811. Then, it is divided into holdings?—It is.

54,812. How many holdings were planted there?—Three.

54,813. Is the whole farm taken up with these holdings?—There are six altogether; three being on the other side of Udrigil that I did not remember about, and three on this side.

54,814. And do these take up the whole farm?—They do.

54,815. Were there buildings on the farm?—Yes.

54,816. What became of them?—The crofters have the buildings.

54,817. Do any of the crofters live in the farm-house?—Two of them.

54,818. And what became of the steading?—The steading is between the three crofters; they agreed among themselves to put up steadings for some, and the old steadings do for two, I think.

54,819. I suppose the two crofters who divide the dwelling-house between them will also divide the steading between them?—I think so, but I am not sure.

54,820. Do you know the forest of Fisherfield?—Yes.

54,821. That is a new forest, is it not?—Yes, it is.

54,822. I observe that in the Parliamentary Return of 1891 it is described as having been formed in 1883; I suppose that is correct?—Yes, that is correct.

54,823. And extends to 30,000 acres. How was that land occupied before it became deer forest?—As a sheep farm alone.

54,824. Was it one farm or more?—Lately it was one.

54,825. The sheep were cleared off and it was turned into a deer forest?—Yes.

54,826. Has any other land that you know of in this quarter been turned into forest since 1891?—None in our immediate neighbourhood that I know of.

54,827. Fisherfield, I suppose, is let as a separate forest, a forest by itself?—I believe so, but I cannot speak as to that. There is an island in the Bay of Gruinard, the island of Gruinard, which used to have four crofters, and there are none on it now.

54,828. What is done with it?—It is under sheep.

54,829. Do you mean as part of a farm?—The shooting tenant of Meikle Gruinard has it as part of his sporting ground.

54,830. What is upon it at present?—There is nothing upon it at present except a few sheep and horses; it is very suitable for three or four crofters.

54,831. Are there any deer upon it?—No.

54,832. Mr Sutherland.—I wish to ask you a question or two with regard to Udrigil. You say it is now given over to six tenants?—Yes.

54,833. When did that happen?—It happened three years ago, I think; it was after the Crofters Commission were here.

54,834. Do you know the tenants who went there?—Yes.

54,835. What did they do before they went there?—Some of them were tenants elsewhere, and others were cottars.

54,836. How many of them were cottars?—There are two in it at present who had no land when the Crofters Commission was here.

54,837. And how are these men doing now, generally?—They are doing well, as far as I know.

54,838. Have they built houses?—The houses were built before.

54,839. Who built the houses?—The proprietor built the houses; they were built before I was born, and the steading was built since I remember.

54,840. That was part of the equipment of the old farm?—Yes.

54,841. But how are the six separate tenants provided with houses?—They had to put up houses.

54,842. Have you any means of knowing how they did that? I mean, did they require to get assistance from outside in any way?—Not to my knowledge; but one of the tenants that went there at first left Udrigil and took another place.

54,843. But are they supposed generally to be prosperous and doing well?—I cannot say.

54,844. What do you think yourself?—Well, I cannot say.

54,845. Do you think those who had no land before are better off now?—I should think they would be better.

54,846. Who fixed the rent?—It was fixed between themselves and the proprietor.

54,847. Have they got leases from the proprietor?—I cannot say; but Mr Stewart is present.

54,848. Do you know what rents they pay?—No, I do not.

54,849. You have that as an example of what is called migration, forming new holdings?—Yes.

54,850. Is Udrigil far away from here?—About nine miles.

54,851. How many cottars are in Sand?—There are none in Sand to my knowledge; there are paupers, but no cottars except one.

54,852. Do you happen to know how many cottars are in First Coast?—I don't think there are any.

54,853. Or in Second Coast?—Three, I am told.

54,854. Mr Shaw Stewart.—About the houses in Udrigil, how many crofters there have built their own houses?—Three, I think.

54,855. Did they build these houses entirely by themselves, without any help?—I think so, as far as I know.

54,856. Do you know the houses yourself?—There are some houses that I never saw.

54,857. But you know these three?—I know the men, but some of the houses I have never seen; I have not been there since the houses were built.

54,858. So you have not seen them?—No.

54,859. Mr Stewart, Factor for Lettervee and Gruinard.—I am sorry to say that Mr Bankes is unable to be present, owing to ill-health; he has gone to France. [To Witness].—You applied to the landlord for grazing for your horses?—Yes.

54,860. Did he not lay down certain rules and conditions?—Yes.

54,861. What did you do with these?—The paper was sent round, and I for one signed it.

54,862. Did you return that paper after it was signed?—It is my belief that it was returned.

54,863. Are you sure it was returned?—I have no proof that it was, but I made all the inquiry that I could, and I was led to believe that it was returned.

54,864. You stated that you had only 820 acres of pasturage for three townships?—I never measured the land,—it was his lordship who told me the extent of the ground.

54,865. As far as my memory serves me, it was 820 for Sand alone. [The Chairman.—He states his impression that the townships of Sand, First Coast, and Second Coast have a share in it, but we can correct that, if it is wrong.] Witness.—I understood ever since I remember that we were mixed together; I could not say exactly what belonged to Sand or what to Coast except on the extreme west side. [The Secretary.—According to the Crofters Commission Report, Sand has 820 acres, and First and Second Coast have a separate area of 420 acres.]

54,866. The Chairman.—There seems to be a matter of over 1200 acres, 21 shares being held by Sand, and 18 by First and Second Coast?—Yes.

Poolewe, Ross-shire.

John Macleod.

JOHN MACLEOD, Crofter, Sand (40)—examined.

54,867. The Chairman.—Was your croft valued by the Crofters Commission?—Yes. [The Secretary.—Holding No. 23, Widow Isabella Macleod, 6 acres 2 roods 35 poles arable; 2 acres outrun; 1½ shares in the common of 820 acres; old rent £8, 1s. 2d.; fair rent £4, 10s.; arrears £4, 1s. 2d., which were cancelled.]

54,868. Did you hear the evidence given by Urquhart?—Yes, most of it.

54,869. Were you appointed as a delegate to attend here along with him?—Yes.

54,870. And do you agree with the evidence he gave?—Yes, as far as I can understand or remember it.

54,871. The main complaint of the township of Sand seems to be the want of hill grazing?—Yes, that is the most of our complaint.

54,872. And that results as the previous witness says from having lost the pasture of Beinn-a'-Chaisgein?—Yes, and some between this and Beinn-a'-Chaisgein since.

54,873. What is the name of it?—Such as the Heights of Drumchork and part of Little Gruinard.

54,874. Was that all part of the same hill grazing?—Yes, at one time.

54,875. And the desire of the township of Sand is to have a restoration of that grazing, or, at all events, to have some addition made to the grazing they presently possess?—Just so.

54,876. I think we may take you as concurring in the evidence of Urquhart, unless there is anything additional you desire to submit?—No, he spoke just according to our views.

54,877. According to the views arrived at at the meeting where you were appointed?—Yes; only there is one other thing that I remember. It was suggested that it was too much to keep so many horses; I think it might be made feasible that the whole estate is in need of grazing for horses, and that they are also applying for horse's grazing on the same hill such as Laide and Mellon-Udrigil. We have delegates from these places and you will hear what they have to say afterwards.

54,878. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Did the eleven horses include mares and foals, or are they all working horses?—They are all working horses.

54,879. Mr Sutherland.—Horses are a necessity for the proper cultivation of the land, are they not?—Oh, yes.

54,880. And I understand you to say that if you had plenty grazing you could keep as many horses as would be necessary for the cultivation of the land?—Certainly.

54,881. Is it not a fact that the spring work must be done in a very short time,—you must take advantage of the good weather as soon as it arrives?—That is a fact.

54,882. Perhaps you might do with fewer horses if you had more time to get ready for putting down your crop?—To be sure, the shorter the time the more horses you require; that is why we keep so many.

54,883. The Chairman.—What do the crofters of Sand mainly depend upon for their livelihood besides their holdings?—A few of them depend upon the herring fishing.

54,884. And what do others do?—They work wherever they can.

54,885. But the whole of them I suppose have to supplement what they make out of the croft by labour elsewhere?—Most of them.

54,886. Mr Stewart, Factor, Lettervee and Gruinard Estates.—Did Mr Bankes offer you free grazing for your horses on the farm of Little Gruinard two years ago?—No, as far as I understood he did not.

54,887. Did he not offer you free grazing for your horses if you would herd them from neighbouring farmers or neighbouring proprietors?—No, as far as I understood it: his terms were to charge £1 for the season.

54,888. You never heard of him offering you free grazing?—No.

54,889. The Chairman.—He offered you grazing, if you would pay £1 for it?—Yes.

54,890. But you did not agree to that?—The majority of the tenants agreed, but I did not agree.

Poolewe, Ross-shire.

John Macleod.

RODERICK MACKENZIE, Crofter, Laide (55 or 56). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

Roderick Mackenzie.

54,891. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

54,891A. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes. [The Secretary.—No. 2, Laide; area 6 acres 1 rood 1 pole arable; 2 acres 1 rood 9 poles outrun; one share in the common pasture of 780 acres, divided into 21 shares, 16 of which were dealt with by the Commission; also of the Lower Laide Parks, 29 acres divided into 11 shares, of which 9 were dealt with. This delegate has a share in both commons. The old rent of his croft, exclusive of the share in the Parks, was £4, 3s.; the fair rent, including the Park share, is £4, 4s.; the arrears were £2, 2s. 1½d., which were cancelled.]

54,892. Were you appointed as a delegate?—Yes.

54,893. What is it you wish to submit to us?—We want more land to put stock on.

54,894. Additional grazing land?—Yes; the pasture of the township of Laide is very small.

54,895. Is there land, in your opinion, available in the vicinity of the township?—I do not think there is, near the township.

54,896. Where is the nearest land that you consider available?—We consider the land on the farm of Poolewe, Ross-shire. — Roderick Mackenzie.

Fisherfield, now held as a deer forest, the most suitable for us.

54,897. How far is the nearest boundary of Fisherfield from the land of your township?—I am not quite sure; there are no milestones, but I take it to be 3½ or 4 miles.

54,898. How is the land occupied that lies between your township and this forest of Fisherfield?—There are three crofting townships, and there is also a piece of ground under sheep,—the factor's sheep. This is Little Gruinard.

54,899. What are the names of the townships?—Sand, First Coast, and Second Coast.

54,900. Do you remember Fisherfield being made into a forest?—Yes.

54,901. That was eleven years ago?—I am not quite sure of the number of years, but I remember the time quite well.

54,902. It is a recent afforestment of land?—Yes. The first year it was let as a forest, the shooting tenant had my horse during the shooting season.

54,903. That land which is now forest was before held as a sheep farm, I suppose?—Yes.

54,904. Who was the farmer?—Mr Scott.

54,905. Is there land there suitable for an extension of the grazings of the township of Laide?—Yes, very suitable.

54,906. Is it only suitable for summer feeding or for both summering and wintering?—I would not put myself up as a judge of land, but I think it is suitable for both summering and wintering.

54,907. Have you, and those who are acting along with you from this township, formed any opinion as to what extent of additional land you require?—Yes, it would be more suitable to take the land between the two rivers.

54,908. Between the Little Gruinard and the Meikle Gruinard?—Yes.

54,909. How far back would you go from the sea?—We have not considered that, as we were not sure how many tenants on the estate are desirous of getting a share of the land.

54,910. Were you deprived of land at any time?—No. What was taken from us has since been mostly restored to us, except one park. We got the lower parks, but not the others.

54,911. Suppose you got this additional land between the two Gruinards, could the crofters of your township put the necessary stock upon it?—I think we could, by helping each other.

54,912. Do you keep a cattle stock at present?—Yes.

54,913. And a sheep stock?—We do not have many sheep; we have no ground that will maintain them. Our outrun is very small.

54,914. But has the township a desire to keep sheep if it had the requisite land?—Yes, sheep would be very useful to the people if they had the means of keeping them.

54,915. Do the crofters of that township, or any of them keep horses?—Yes.

54,916. Has each of them a horse?—No, they cannot all keep horses.

54,917. Do you happen to know how many horses are in the township?—During the working season, in spring, we have nine or ten horses, but when the work is over we are obliged to sell them, as there is no place to keep them.

54,918. How do the crofters of your township of Laide mainly earn their livelihood?—In various ways; they go to various works, to the salmon fishing, the herring fishing, and to railway work, and out as trawlers. Some of them go to the forest to make footpaths.

54,919. Has there been a good deal of labour going on in the neighbourhood of your township?—There has been more recently than I remember, owing to a pier that is in course of construction, and some repairs to the high road.

54,920. Is it the desire of your township to get such an extension of grazing as would occupy the time of the crofters wholly, or is it merely in supplement of the means of livelihood they already have?—Although they got the land I refer to, it would not be sufficient to keep them at home always; they would have to go from home to earn money to pay the rents.

54,921. Mr Munro.—You mentioned that the crofters in your township followed a variety of occupations, such as fishing and labouring on the railways?—Yes.

54,922. Do your crofts suffer in any degree from the absence of the crofters who follow such occupations?—Undoubtedly, when they are away like that they cannot be working at drains, or making dykes, or putting the ground in good order.

54,923. You cannot do the two things properly?—No. If the land would maintain ourselves we would stop at home and keep it in better order; as it is, we have to go about and earn money to pay the rent with and buy food.

54,924. If you got a sufficient extent of land, you think you could live upon it without going away to follow another occupation?—Yes, we are of that opinion.

54,925. Could you stock that additional land if you got it?—Some of us could stock such a holding, others could not, but we might help each other.

54,926. Mr Gordon.—The land that you have applied for in Fisherfield forest is all pasture, is it not?—Yes.

54,927. There is no arable land in that part?—There is arable land there, but I don't know any who is wanting arable land.

54,928. The wants of your township are for pasture land?—Yes.

54,929. How would you propose to occupy that pasture land?—We could go in shares.

54,930. But what stock would you propose to put on it?—We were not sure that we would get it, and, accordingly, we did not contemplate that.

54,931. It is more for your extra stock, I suppose?—Yes.

54,932. Would there be sufficient ground in the portion of the forest for which you have applied to keep a hirsel of sheep?—There is a lot of very bad land there; there are acres of land there that would not maintain a sheep.

54,933. Is it rocky ground?—Yes.

54,934. With reference to a question put to you as to the croft being self-supporting, is there enough land in the crofts to keep a man occupied throughout the year?—No; many of the crofts have only four acres and so on up to seven.

54,935. Is there any possibility of getting additional arable land enough to keep the families on the lands in your own neighbourhood?—There is not land near us that is suitable.

54,936. Then, before you could make these crofts self-supporting you would require to remove one-half of the men from the present township?—As we are presently situated, we are obliged to leave portions of our crofts out in grass; if we had the land we are applying for, we could take in more of our crofts by sending our stock to the outlying pasture.

54,937. But would yourself or your neighbours be inclined to move to another part of the country so as to make the crofts bigger?—I cannot speak for others, but for my own part I would not like to shift: since the Crofters Commission was here I made very extensive improvements on my croft, and it was my intention to terminate my life upon it.

54,938. If you got this additional grazing you would prefer to remain as you are?—Yes.

54,939. Did your township apply for any of this land between the two rivers? Were they a party to the application?—Yes.

54,940. The Sand township applied for a certain extent of ground between these rivers extending from the sea on the north to Loch-a'-Mhadaidh on the south. Now, were you a party to this general application?—Yes.

54,941. So that there were more townships than those of Sand and First and Second Coast applying for this land?—Mellon-Udrigil and Aultbea also applied for it, and Badfern: all the townships were looking for this land.

54,942. If there was more land than was required to keep your extra animals, would you be willing to work it as a club stock farm?—I think that is the way we would work it.

54,943. And, do you think you would be able to stock it?—Yes, I think so, by helping each other; if one was behind with means, another would help him.

54,944. Your main want being additional pasture, you would be content if you got this ground?—Yes, undoubtedly.

54,945. Mr Shaw Stewart.—What is your own occupation?—I am a blacksmith.

54,946. Do you remember Fisherfield as a sheep farm?—Yes, very well.

54,947. Do you know what the rent of it was?—No.

54,948. I may tell you it is entered in the Parliamentary Return as £1100 before afforestment. Have you and your neighbours ever considered what rent you would be prepared to give for the grazing of Fisherfield if you got it?—I cannot very well speak on that point; there may be some in the township who, if the rent were valued too high, would not consider themselves able to afford that price for it.

54,949. Do I understand that there are enough wanting the grazing to occupy the whole forest of Fisherfield?—We do not want the whole forest.

54,950. How far back would you go?—We were thinking that from the shore up to Loch-a'-Mhadaidh would be enough.

54,951. It is the same ground that the applicants from Sand would like, is it not?—Yes, the desire was that it should be occupied by the tenants of the estate altogether.

54,952. Do you know how many sheep were formerly wintered on Fisherfield when it was a sheep farm?—I do not know.

54,953. Have you no idea?—No.

54,954. It is not so very long ago since it was a sheep farm?—No, but I have no knowledge about it at all.

54,955. Do you know anything about the management of sheep at all?—I don't know about the habits of sheep.

54,956. Mr Sutherland.—Is all the land in your neighbourhood in deer forest?—Every township on the estate has some hill ground, and the rest is deer forest.

54,957. Are there no sheep farms in your neighbourhood?—Only the one farm that Mr Stewart has.

54,958. What is the name of it?—There is Drumchork and Little Gruinard, they are held together. These are the only two sheep farms on the estate.

54,959. Is Drumchork near your holdings?—Yes.

54,960. What is the size of that farm?—I cannot tell you.

54,961. How many sheep are on it?—I cannot say.

54,962. Is it a large farm?—Middling.

54,963. Is it made up of two farms, do you say?—It used to be two farms, but Mr Stewart now has the whole.

54,964. When was it made into one farm?—I am not quite sure; he had the two farms for a considerable time before the Crofters Commission were here in 1888.

54,965. And, is there good land on that farm?—Some of it very good, but some as bad as there is to be found in the world.

54,966. All over, is it as good as the forest land you were speaking of?—About the same.

54,967. The Chairman.—The farm of Drumchork seems to be held at a rent of £80 and the farm of Little Gruinard is said to be in the hands of the proprietrix, and is entered in the valuation roll at a rental of £40. Now, suppose you got an assignment of grazing from the forest of Fisherfield, would you and those you represent be prepared to put up any necessary fences?—It would not be easy for us to do that, and that is one of the reasons why we wanted the ground between the two rivers from the sea; the rivers themselves would be the boundaries. That was our object in selecting that particular piece of land.

Poolewe, Ross-shire. Roderick Mackenzie.

54,968. But if a fence were wanted from river to river across the country by the side of Loch-a'-Mhadaidh, would the township be prepared to put up that fence?—If we get that, we are not of opinion that we should be at the whole expense of the fence.

54,969. You think you should put up one half, and those on the other side fence the other half?—We thought it should not go more than that against us.

54,970–71. But you would be prepared, as I understand, to do that?—We are so desirous of getting the place that we would make our best endeavours to do that.

54,972. Now, you said something about the improvements you had made upon your holding since the decision of the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

54,973. Have these improvements been both upon land and buildings?—I erected a dwelling-house, and I also made some improvement on the land.

54,974. Have some of the other crofters in the township done similarly?—Yes, they were doing very well, according to their ability.

54,975. Both upon buildings and upon land?—Yes.

54,976. Has there been a marked improvement on the buildings, and in reclamation since the passing of the Crofters Act?—All those who were able to improve, did so, undoubtedly. They have a surer foundation than they had before.

54,977. The surer foundation being security of tenure?—Yes.

54,978. Then, you are able to say that there has been much more improvement during the eight years since the Act than during the eight years immediately preceding it?—Oh, yes, there are hundreds of pounds spent in the township to which I belong, and in the adjoining township.

54,979. Mr Stewart, Factor for Letterewe and Gruinard Estate.—Did you know that the farm of Little Gruinard was advertised to be let?—Yes.

54,980. Why did you not apply for it then?—I did not consider it suitable for me.

54,981. You stated that Little Gruinard was in my hands?—Yes, I said so.

54,982. Who told you that? [The Chairman.—I ascertained from the valuation roll that it is in the hands of the proprietrix.]

RODERICK MACKENZIE, Merchant, Laide (62).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

54,983. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

54,984. Was your croft valued by the Crofters Commission?—Yes. [The Secretary.—No. 4 Laide; area 8 acres 2 roods 20 poles arable; and 5 acres 7 poles outrun; one share in the common of 780 acres, divided into 21 shares; also a share in the Laide Parks. Old rent, exclusive of the parks, £8; fair rent, including the parks, £5, 10s., arrears £7, which were cancelled].

54,985. Were you appointed as a delegate from this township?—Yes.

54,986. Along with the previous witness?—Yes.

54,987–88. Did you hear the evidence which he gave?—Yes, I heard it. The whole district is applying for the land mentioned by Malcolm Urquhart.

54,989. I suppose you can confirm and corroborate the evidence he gave?—Yes.

54,990. Have you anything to add?—The only thing I have to add is that Mr Bankes had offered us land up in the hill, but we had to pay the money in advance. We had to send our horses to a fank, and we would not be allowed to go and see them again: supposing the horse died we would not get the money back. We were to deliver the horses to the herd at the fank, and they themselves would send the horses to the hill.

54,991. These were the conditions made?—Yes.

54,992. We would like very much to see these conditions in writing; have any of you got a copy of them?—Some of us signed the conditions, but the paper did not remain with us. The money had to be paid in advance, and we would not be allowed to go and see the horse unless the herd was along with us.

Poolewe, Ross-shire.

Roderick Mackenzie.

54,993. Who had charge of the paper among you?—The paper was circulated through the townships.

54,994. Was it sent back to Mr Stewart or Mr Bankes?—I think it was returned.

54,995. Mr Stewart, could we see that paper? [Mr Stewart.—I did not get it back, my lord].

54,996. But you have your own copy, no doubt?—[Mr Stewart.—I have no copy. I jotted down the conditions just as Mr Bankes told me verbally; I handed them the paper, but they never returned it to me.]

54,997. But did you not keep a copy of it?—[Mr Stewart.—No.]

54,998. Has Mr Bankes not a copy of it?—[Mr Stewart: —No, I just jotted it down at the Martinmas collection.]

54,999. To whom did you hand the paper to be circulated through the townships?—[Mr Stewart.—I could not say exactly, but it was to some of those who were at the rent collection; and it was with Sandy Mackenzie, merchant, Sand, for some time. If any one could say that he returned it to me, that would be sufficient.]

55,000. At any rate, was there a difficulty among you about acceding to the conditions laid down?—Witness.—Some of us were against the conditions, but we had such a desire for grass that some signed.

55,001. Some signed and others refused to sign?—I think the majority of them agreed.

55,002. Did you sign yourself?—Yes.

55,003. Perhaps you could tell us the conditions you agreed to?—The condition was that if we took the land referred to, which was in the hill above Little Gruinard, we were to deliver the horses at the fank at Little Gruinard and bring £1 along with each horse, that being the grazing rent.

55,004. And the horse would be sent by the estate management to the hill?—They were not bound at all if anything went wrong with the horse, and in that way we might lose both the horse and the grazing rent.

55,005. Only you, yourself were so anxious to get additional grazing that you agreed to these conditions?—Yes, for I am obliged to tether my horse on the croft; it is there I keep it.

55,006. But the transaction never was carried through?—No.

55,007. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Did you advise your friends to fall in with the agreement, or did you advise them not to?—I was not in favour of it at first, but latterly I saw that every one was in such want of grazing that they agreed. Formerly we used to get grazing for our horses on other estates, on the estate of Gairloch, and also in Elphin, in the parish of Assynt, Sutherland. Now, on every estate they say 'keep your horses to your own estate.'

55,008. But if you became in favour of the agreement, how was it that it was not gone on with?—I don't know, I cannot tell that; perhaps they thought that we would not agree to the conditions, or were only desirous of shutting our mouths.

55,009. But did Mr Stewart understand that you all wanted to fall in with the agreement?—I think he understood so.

55,010. But you are not sure?—My impression is that he understood it; he was among us, and was speaking to us about it.

55,011. But the simplest way would have been to return the paper and say that you would abide by the conditions, instead of which you did not return the paper?—I don't know whether it was returned or not; it was circulated through the township, and where has it lain if it was not returned?

55,012. Was it never in your charge?—It passed me and I signed it.

55,013. Who did you give it to?—It went from our township to Mellon-Udrigil.

55,014. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Did you ever hear of pasture being offered by the proprietor free for your horses?—No, I never heard that.

55,015. You heard a question put by Mr Stewart to-day conveying that suggestion?—He need not put such a question as that to me; it was never offered to me.

JOHN URQUHART, Crofter, Badfern, Aultbea (40). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

Poolewe, Ross-shire.

John Urquhart.

55,016. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes. [The Secretary.—The croft consists of 3 acres 3 roods arable; 2 roods 30 poles outrun; and a share in a common of 290 acres, divided into six shares; the old rent was £3; and the fair rent is £2, 12s. Arrears amounting to £1, 15s. were ordered to be paid].

55,017. Are you appearing as a delegate?—My brother was elected a delegate, but he is from home and I came in his stead.

55,018. What is your brother's name?—Donald Urquhart.

55,019. Where has he gone to?—He is in the Letterewe Forest.

55,020. Were you present at the meeting at which your brother was appointed?—No, I was not present.

55,021. What is it you wish to say?—I wish to say that we are anxious to get more land to carry through the stock.

55,022. Do you mean grazing ground?—Yes, grazing for a horse.

55,023. For all the horses in the township?—We did not use to have but one horse in the township that I am in, and a horse that another one had.

KENNETH MACLEOD, Crofter, Tighnafaoilinn, Aultbea (68). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

Kenneth Macleod.

55,024. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes. [The Secretary.—The area of the croft is 4 acres 2 roods 17 poles arable; 1 rood outrun; share in the pasture of 620 acres, common to the townships of Tigh-na-faoilinn and Aultbea and the farm of Aird, and divided into 21 shares; also of 18 acres of land common to the township of Tigh-na-faoilinn; old rent £5, 0s. 2d.; fair rent £3, 8s.; arrears, £7, 19s. 1½d. cancelled.]

55,025. Are you here as a delegate?—Yes.

55,026. Was there a meeting of the Tigh-na-faoilinn and Aultbea crofters?—There was a meeting held at Laide of the whole of the townships of Laide, Tigh-na-faoilinn, Coast, Mellon-Udrigil, and Sand.

55,027. Is it additional pasture that you want?—Yes.

55,028. The land between the two rivers?—Yes.

55,029. Up to Loch-a'-Mhadaidh?—Yes.

55,030. The same land that was spoken to by Malcolm Urquhart and John Macleod?—Yes.

55,031. That is all the land I suppose that you ask our attention to?—Yes.

55,032. And if you had some such assignment of land as that, you would be satisfied?—We agree that we would.

55,033. Mr Stewart, Factor for Letterewe and Gruinard.—Did you get any additional land from Mr Bankes since the Crofters Commission fixed your fair rent?—Yes, I did.

55,034. How much?—How many acres, Mr Stewart?

55,035. That is what I am asking you. [The Chairman.—Probably the witness cannot give the extent in acres; what is the extent?]—Mr Stewart.—The extent is about 45 acres arable, and the commonty that Mr Muir had on the farm of Aird. That farm has been cut up since the Commission was here, and given to Kenneth Macleod and six or seven others, in addition to the holdings they had. It is not exactly handed over under the Crofters Act, but it is quite possible it will never be taken from them as long as they pay their rents. [The Chairman.—Are you willing to let them have it under the Act?]—Mr Stewart.—I am not prepared to say so, as Mr Bankes is not present.

55,036. Mr Sutherland.—Has that land been a great benefit to you and the others?—It will do us good; we cannot cultivate it without a horse; we have to tether the horse, and we cannot keep both horse and cows.

55037. But if there are 37 acres of arable land, I surey you can keep a horse on the addition?—We can only keep the horse or the cow, as they have taken from us the hill ground that our forefathers had.

Poolewe, Ross-shire.

Kenneth Macleod.

55,038. Mr Gordon.—Do you know the farm of Drumchork?—Yes.

55,039. How far is it from your township?—Scarcely a mile.

55,040. Does the tenant reside on Drumchork?—Yes, Mr Stewart.

55,041. What is the extent of the farm?—I don't know. [Mr Stewart.—Forty-five acres arable and about 2500 acres pasture].

55,042. Does the pasture of Drumchork lie contiguous to the townships of Aultbea and Tigh-na-faoilinn?—Yes, it is adjacent to Badfern and up to Sand and the Coasts.

55,043. Did the crofters in these townships ever apply for any part of the grazings of Drumchork?—[The Chairman.—They applied for land and it was refused by Order, dated 17th December 1888].

55,044. How would the hill grazings of Drumchork suit these townships in comparison with what they applied for at Gruinard?—The land between the two rivers would be more suitable when there are a large number of us about it.

55,045. But I speak only of the township in which you are a crofter?—All the townships on the estate are in one concern for the land between the two rivers.

55,046. Does the pasture of Drumchork march with the pasture of your township and the other townships in that quarter?—It marches with Badfern, with Sand, and the Coasts.

55,047. And Badfern marches with the pasture of Aultbea?—Yes, and with Tigh-na-faoilinn; and it also marches with Laide and the Coasts behind.

55,048. What is the distance between Tigh-na-faoilinn and Little Gruinard, roughly speaking?—Five miles.

55,049. And how far would the pasture of Drumchork be from Tigh-na-faoilinn?—It is scarcely a mile between my house and Drumchork house.

55,050. Would it not be more convenient for you to put your cattle and horses there than to send them five miles away from home?—Yes, but that might not suit.

55,051. Why?—It would suit us well enough in that way.

55,052. Do you mean that it would not suit the estate management?—How would that suit, when we were wanting to get the land and after all did not get it?

Alexander Maciver.

ALEXANDER MACIVER, Crofter, Tigh-na-faoilinn (67). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

55,053. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes. [The Secretary.—Area of croft 4 acres 0 roods 5 poles arable; 3 roods outrun; same grazing as the previous witness; old rent £6, 0s. 2d.; fair rent £3, 10s.]

55,054. You came to give evidence I think about getting more hill grazing?—Yes.

55,055. From Fisherfield?—Yes.

55,056. We have heard a good deal of evidence about it already. So far as you are able to follow it, do you agree with that evidence?—Yes.

55,057. And the township of Tigh-na-faoilinn would be satisfied if they got an assignment of additional grazing such as they are asking for?—Yes.

55,058. Have you anything special of your own that you wish to mention?—No, only that we would like to get what we were applying for, in order that we might have our stock there. We are cramped down on the shore here.

55,059. We quite understand that from our witnesses, and we will see the ground ourselves.

Duncan Urquhart.

DUNCAN URQUHART, Crofter, Aultbea (47)—examined.

55,060. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter at Aultbea?—A crofter and miller.

55,061. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—No.

55,062. What is it you wish to tell us?—I want to tell you that we are short of pasture for our cild cattle and for our horses.

Poolewe, Ross-shire.

Duncan Urquhart.

55,063. In the township of Aultbea?—Yes.

55,064. Are you speaking on behalf of the township as a delegate?—Yes.

55,065. What pasture have you at present?—We have between four and five acres of arable land, and we have the common between Tigh-na-faoilinn and Aultbea.

55,066. You are here to say on behalf of the township that the pasture you have is too limited, and you desire to get more land if it can be obtained?—Yes.

55,067. What land do you point to for such an extension?—We point to the lowest end of Fisherfield forest.

55,068. That is the land between the two Gruinard rivers, and up to Loch-a'-Mhadaidh?—Yes.

55,069. It is the same land we have been hearing so much about?—Yes.

55,070. And, I suppose, you agree with the evidence we have had already upon that matter?—Yes.

55,071. Have you anything to add?—Nothing particular, but I may say that Drumchork is marching with our common pasture.

55,072. Were you one of the applicants for a part of Drumchork?—No.

55,073. Is there land forming part of the farm of Drumchork which would be suitable for an extension of your grazings?—Yes.

55,074. Speaking as a man who knows the locality, which of the two portions of ground is in your judgment more suitable,—part of the farm of Drumchork or part of Fisherfield?—Drumchork is marching with us.

55,075. Is the grazing as good?—Yes, very good.

55,076. You are referring particularly, I suppose, to the land which was applied for in 1888 and refused?—Yes.

55,077. And if you had that, would it meet the desires of the township?—I think it would.

55,078. It would afford a sufficient expanse of grazing for the cattle you have?—Yes.

55,079. And would you and the others in the township be able to add such additional stock as that new assignment of land might require?—I think we would.

55,080. Mr Sutherland.—Do you know any land in this neighbourhood suitable for making new holdings?—Yes.

55,081. Where?—There is plenty round about.

55,082. Could you specify the places?—Isle of Ewe, Gruinard Island, Kernsary, Strathnasealg, Letterewe, and Inverewe here.

55,083. Is that all?—Yes, that is all.

55,084. Are you of opinion that we ought to see these places and satisfy ourselves whether they are suitable?—They are suitable for cultivation.

55,085. How is Isle of Ewe occupied at present?—By a sheep farmer.

55,086. Is it a farm by itself or only part of a farm?—A farm by itself.

55,087. How is Gruinard Island occupied?—Just as a rabbit-warren.

55,088-89. Is it not part of any grazing farm or shooting?—No, Mr Baring, the shooting tenant, gave it to the crofters for grazing their horses.

55,090. How is Kernsary occupied?—It is occupied as part of a deer forest, the Inverewe forest.

55,091. Does it constitute a large part of that forest?—Yes, it is the best part of it.

55,092. How is Inverewe occupied?—Mr Osgood Mackenzie works the arable farm for himself.

55,093. Has Inverewe Forest any other name?—Kernsary forest.

55,094. I understood you to say that Kernsary was part of the Inverewe Forest?—Yes.

55,095. How does it come to have a separate name?—I cannot tell you that; it was a separate farm, but it is on the same estate.

55,096. When was Inverewe made into a deer forest?—Nine or ten years ago.

Poolewe, Ross-shire. — Duncan Urquhart.

55,097. Who is the proprietor of the Inverewe Forest?—Mr Osgood Mackenzie, Inverewe.

55,098. These places are, in your opinion, fit to make new holdings?—Oh, yes.

55,099. If such holdings were made, would the people be in as favourable a condition as they are in the holdings down on the sea coast?—I think they would be much better.

55,100. Are there a number of people in this neighbourhood who would be in a position to take such holdings?—Yes.

55,101. And to stock them?—Yes.

55,102. And erect houses on them?—Yes.

55,103. All would not be able to do it?—No, not all.

55,104. The most prosperous of them would?—Yes.

55,105. Mr Shaw Stewart.—How many crofters could you place on the Isle of Ewe?—I think 12 or 15 could be very comfortable there.

55,106. Do you mean that they would be comfortable as fishermen with a patch of potato ground, or as small farmers?—Small farmers: they could have a good many acres arable.

55,107. How many acres would go to each, roughly speaking, taking your lowest estimate of 12,—what size of a holding would each have?—I am not sure, but I think it would make between 12 and 15. I have been there as a farm servant.

55,108. You consider the whole island to be arable land?—Yes, and there is good outrun on it besides; it keeps a few hundred sheep on the outside.

55,109. But how much of it, do you think, could be cultivated?—I do not know the acreage of it; there are 13 good fields in it, some of them between 40 and 50 acres.

55,110. How is it occupied now?—As an arable farm.

55,111. What farm is it?—It belongs to Sir Kenneth Mackenzie.

55,112. As to the Isle of Gruinard, how many holdings would it accommodate?—It would do for four.

55,113. And Kernsary?—Four or five, I think.

55,114. And the Inverewe farm?—Six or seven, at any rate.

55,115. Do you say there are a number of people in your neighbourhood who could stock the land?—I don't know, I cannot say.

55,116. You said so just now; Mr Sutherland asked you if they could stock the land and build the houses and you said, yes?—I know they could build a house for a croft of 10 or 12 acres.

55,117. What would it cost to build such a house?—Between £50 and £60.

55,118. What kind of house would you build for that?—I think a comfortable house for a crofter.

55,119. But just describe it, please?—A four-roomed house.

55,120. What kind of roof?—Slated roof.

55,121. A stone and lime house with slated roof?—Yes.

55,122. You could build that for £50?—Between £50 and £60, with their own labour.

55,123. And they could stock these holdings themselves, some of them?—Yes, I know there are some who could do it.

55,124. And still have enough over to pay rent for the land?—Yes. The stock would pay the rent.

55,125. Not in bad years, would it?—They might have something to lie over for a year or two.

55,126. But would not most of their money go in the preliminary expenses?—It all depends what farm they would get; if they would get a farm to put on stock, they might do it.

55,127. I am taking the places you mentioned as good places for farming. Do you seriously think they would not get into debt by erecting their own houses, stocking the land and paying a fair rent?—I don't think they would, if they knew how to work.

55,128. They would require to be good farmers?—Of course, they would.

55,129. Would they depend upon fishing at all?—Oh, yes.

55,130. They would fish besides?—Yes.

55,131. And would that occupy their whole time,—supposing they had their houses built and land stocked, could they live by the crofts?—Yes, if they got the land they would have more opportunity in the winter and spring to work their crofts, and they could stay at home when the fishing was done.

55,132. They would have to go to the fishing?—Oh, yes.

55,133. And who would work the croft?—The croft would have to be neglected sometimes; the wife and children perhaps would look after it till their return, during the fishing-season when the men are away at the fishing.

55,134. But there is a great deal to be done on a small farm in the fishing season?—Well, if they got enough land, perhaps it would take all their time to keep it right, and they would live on it.

55,135. What would you call enough land to keep a man entirely occupied?—I would think between 12 and 15 acres.

55,136. Then that would not accommodate so many as you mentioned.

55,137. Mr Gordon.—About this pasture that you applied for at Gruinard,—were you one of those who applied for it?—Yes.

55,138. What was your reason for not applying for the Drumchork pasture? Was it the belief that you would not get it?—Yes, and we were told that the farm was not paying sufficient rent to be broken down under the Crofters Act.

55,139. You were under the impression that it would not be available?—Yes.

55,140. Now, about the Isle of Ewe; is the arable land there under cultivation in the meantime?—Partly.

55,141. Are you aware that this Commission cannot deal with land under cultivation?—That is what we were told.

55,142. How is the Home Farm of Inverewe occupied?—By Mr Mackenzie, the proprietor.

55,143. Is it cultivated?—Yes.

55,144. Both these farms are cultivated, Isle of Ewe and Inverewe?—Yes.

55,145. Is there any cultivation at Kernsary?—I think not.

55,146. Nor in the Island of Gruinard, I suppose?—No.

55,147. Is there old arable land at Kernsary?—Yes.

55,148. Land that has been cultivated at one time?—Yes.

55,149. Is there any such on Gruinard Island?—Yes.

55,150. Do you think both these places could be reclaimed again?—Yes.

55,151. What is the size of the Inverewe Farm?—I cannot say.

55,152. It is the Home Farm of the estate?—Yes.

55,153. Beside the mansion-house?—Yes, and there is another farm, Tournaig, on the same estate.

55,154. Is there old arable land there?—Yes.

55,155. How is the farm occupied at present?—By Mr Mackenzie.

55,156. Is the land under grass or under crop?—Under crop partly.

55,157. Is there a house and steading upon it?—Yes.

55,158. In good repair?—Yes.

55,159. What would you do with the house if you broke up the farm? Would it be suitable for a croft?—No.

55,160. Who lives in the house?—Mr Mackenzie, at present.

55,161. What like are the houses upon the Isle of Ewe?—A farm-house and steading.

55,162. Are they substantial buildings?—Yes.

55,163. Would they be suitable for a crofter?—Not for one.

55,164. Could you put more than one crofter into the same house?—Yes.

55,165. Would they agree, do you think?—I do not know.

55,166. Are there any buildings at Kernsary?—There are.

Poolewe, Ross-shire. Duncan Urquhart.

55,167. How are they occupied?—By Mr Mackenzie's keeper.

55,168. Is there more than one dwelling-house there?—Not at present.

55,169. The Chairman.—I observe that the deer forest of Kernsary is entered in the valuation roll at a rent of £90, and the Home Farm of Inverewe is in the proprietor's hands, at a rent of £160.

55,169A. Do you know the forest of Letterewe?—Yes.

55,170. I see it appears to be let as deer forest grazings to Mr Laycock, at a rent of £540; but that is in a different locality?—Yes, it is up Loch Maree side.

55,171. When you were talking over this matter with your friends, did you and they consider the subject of new holdings?—No, we only want the pasture for our cild cattle and horses.

55,172. You did not consider the question of new holdings or how they might be stocked and the buildings put up?—No.

55,173. And, therefore, you did not consider whether such new holdings might be formed?—No.

55,174. So that the evidence you have given us on that subject is your own individual opinion on the matter, and not the result of conference with your friends?—Just so.

55,175. Mr Stewart, Factor for Letterewe and Gruinard.—Do you know well the ground in this part of the forest that you have applied for?—Yes.

55,176. What is the length of fence that would be required to enclose it as a horse park?—I am not quite sure, but I think between the two rivers about 3½ miles or perhaps 4.

55,177. Is the big river proof against horses, or could horses ford it?—Partly.

55,178. Do not horses ford it and cross to the other property?—Yes, of course, in dry weather.

55,179. Do not they do the same at Little Gruinard?—Yes.

55,180. Is there a road passing below this ground that you want, the county road?—Yes, the road goes through it.

55,181. You have no idea of the length of fence that would be required?—No, if both rivers were to be fenced down alongside.

55,182. Would not the ground require to be wholly surrounded by a fence?—We were thinking of putting a fence at the top end, and that a herd would be a good help for them.

55,183. Mr Osgood Mackenzie of Inverewe.—You said, I think, just now, that 15 acres was the right quantity of arable land for a crofter?—I beg your pardon; I said I thought if a crofter had that he could make a living off it.

55,184. Do you know how many acres arable there are at Kernsary?—No.

55,185. May I tell you that there are, I think, 16 acres. How could you put five crofters comfortably on 16 acres?—I think there were five crofters on at one time.

55,186. Were they comfortable?—I cannot say.

55,187. Mr Sutherland.—Do you accept the 16 acres as all the arable that is on Kernsary?—I don't think so.

55,188. Do you know what a 'deer forest grazing' is?—No.

55,189. In the valuation roll, Letterewe is called a 'deer forest grazing'?—Yes.

55,190. Can you explain to us what that is?—No.

55,191. The Chairman.—I think it right to say that I cannot find the forest of Kernsary, or the forest of Inverewe or whatever be the proper name of it, in the official return of 1891. Are you quite clear that it was made a forest ten or twelve years ago?—I could not be quite sure of that.

55,192. But is it more than three years ago?—Oh, yes.

Murdo Mackenzie.

MURDO MACKENZIE, Cottar, Laide (47)—examined.

55,193. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No.

55,194. Are you a cottar?—Yes.

55,195. Have you no land?—I am sorry I cannot speak English very well.

Poolewe, Ross-shire. Murdo Mackenzie.

55,196. You wrote to the Secretary in these terms:—'No. 1 Laide, Aultbea, Dingwall, March 30th, 1893. 'Sir,—I am writing this in order that you will lodge 'my claim before the Deer Forest Commission for a 'patch of land situated between the county road and 'the sea, part of the deer forest of Fisherfield, on the 'estate of Letterewe and Gruinard, which was once in 'possession of people that were making a good living 'in it; and if I would get it (the ground) at the rent 'fixed by the Commission I am sure I could make my 'living.—I am yours truly, Murdo Mackenzie.' Does this letter set forth the claim you wish to make now?—Yes.

55,197. We have already heard a great deal of evidence about this forest of Fisherfield and the land that is desired. Have you anything further to say?—Yes, I would like to get hold of a piece of land on which I could live with my family.

55,198. You mean a piece of arable land?—Yes.

55,199. What sort of croft are you in quest of?—The size that I could live on with my family.

55,200. How many acres arable?—About twelve or fifteen.

55,201. And hill grazing to correspond, I suppose?—Yes.

55,202. What family have you?—Ten of a family, the eldest only thirteen.

55,203. Could you stock such a holding as that?—I think I could.

55,204. And put up the buildings?—Oh, yes.

55,205. Without any assistance?—If I would get some help.

55,206. From friends?—Yes.

55,207. Have you any land at all?—I am only in the house with my brother.

55,208. You live upon his holding in short?—Yes.

55,209. Do you pay any rent?—No.

55,210. Do you think you could take up a holding and pay a rent of £5, or £8, or £10 for it?—Yes.

55,211. You wish us to consider whether there is such land in your vicinity available for that purpose?—Yes.

55,212. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Were there ever crofters on Fisherfield?—Yes.

55,213. Can you tell us when?—I cannot say exactly when.

55,214. It was long held as a sheep farm, I suppose?—Yes.

55,215. Are there ruins of houses there?—Yes.

55,216. Are there many such?—Yes, in some parts of it.

55,217. And signs of old cultivation?—There were crofters' houses on the whole place, between the road and the sea; the whole way between the two rivers.

55,218. And you think that place is suitable for forming new holdings?—Yes.

55,219. Mr Angus Stewart, Factor for Letterewe and Gruinard Estate.—Are you aware that Mr Bankes has two crofts vacant at present?—Where?

55,220. In Slaggan?—That is a place where no poor man can live very well; he cannot take anything there to his family without carrying it five miles on his back. There is no road to it.

55,221. Is there not a bridle path leading to that township? [Mr Gordon.—Where is it?]—It is close to the sea, at the mouth of Letterewe on the north side.

55,222. Did you know Hector Macgregor, the former tenant of that croft?—He had to leave it because he could not live there.

55,223. Hector, I mean,—the old man who is now dead; did you know him?—Yes.

55,224. Did he rear up a large family in comfort there?—Oh, I daresay he did.

55,225. Are they not well off, every one of them, just now?—There are none of them there just now.

55,226. But they have made their way in the world, and they got out of that place even although it is so

Poolewe, Ross-shire.
Murdo Mackenzie.

isolated. You never thought of applying for these crofts?—Yes.

55,227. For the Slaggan crofts?—Yes, but I was afraid I could not live there.

55,228. You did not ask Mr Bankes or me about them?—No, I never did.

55,229. The Chairman.—Why did you not make any inquiry about these crofts since they were vacant?—Because I was thinking that I could not live there very well.

55,230. Are there not people living there at present?—There are three families there, I think.

55,231. And the crofts that are now vacant were previously occupied by crofters, I suppose?—Yes.

55,232. Did you make no examination of the holdings to see whether they might not suit you?—No, I never looked at them.

55,233. But you knew they were vacant?—Yes.

55,234. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Is it the case that you do not think crofter life is a very useful one unless you can live entirely by your croft? You said you want land that you could live entirely by?—Yes.

55,235. Is that the reason why you did not apply for one of these crofts at Slaggan?—Yes.

55,236. Because you knew you could not live by it?—There is no school there for my children to go to.

55,237. That is one good reason, but is another reason because you want land where you can make a living out of the holding itself?—Just so.

55,238. Have you ever seen a man make a living off his own croft without getting work elsewhere?—There is many a croft such as I want, but there are crofters in them.

55,239. I should like to see a croft which will maintain a man entirely without getting work outside; where can you show me one?—In the township of Laide where I live.

55,240. What is the number of the croft?—Donald Maciver for one.

55,241. Does he not take work anywhere else?—He is taking work; he is not going to the fishing.

55,242. He is earning wages somewhere else?—No, he is not a night away from his own house for work.

55,243. But he does take work in the day-time?—Yes.

55,244. Is he a roadman?—Yes.

55,245. Is he a salmon fisher also?—No, he has been working on the roads for two years, and I could not get a day's work on that road.

55,246. There is no croft in your neighbourhood where the crofter has not to go and work at times?—No.

55,247. Mr Sutherland.—Did you ever know a farmer that had not to work?—I know of plenty of farmers who have servants to work for them.

55,248. Have you ever been in Coigach?—Yes.

55,249. Are there holdings there upon which a family lives without other work than on the croft?—I am not very well acquainted there.

55,250. But about Slaggan and the holdings there, did you think that if you had applied for one of these you would have got it?—I cannot say.

55,251. You did not try it?—No.

55,252. Had you any opinion about it?—Yes, I would not like to go there with the family I have: that was the very reason.

55,253. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—What is the distance between it and the nearest school?—Six miles of very bad road.

55,254. Are there children at Slaggan just now?—I cannot say.

55,255. There seem to be a number of houses there; do you know whether there are any children and how they are educated?—I know there are children but I don't know whether they are not above school age.

55,256. You don't how their education is attended to?—I was told by the last man that left Slaggan that he left it for want of a school. [Mr Stewart.—There is a school in the township and has been for 20 years back.—Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Is there a certificated teacher there?—Mr Stewart.—No, he is not a certificated teacher; he is a student kept there by the Ladies' Association.]

Poolewe, Ross-shire.
Murdo Mackenzie.

55,257. Mr Stewart, Factor for Letterewe and Gruinard Estates.—Do you know the farm of Udrigil?—Yes.

55,258. Is there good arable land there?—I have never seen it very good.

55,259. Do you know that Mr Bankes cut it up for six crofters?—No.

55,260. Did you know that two of these crofts fell vacant last Martinmas?—Yes.

55,261. Why did you not apply for either of these two crofts?—I did not think I could live there with the heavy rent that was on it.

55,262. Did you know that the crofters there got their crofts at their own valuation? (No answer).

ALEXANDER MACKENZIE, Crofter, Achgarve (55)—examined.

Alexander Mackenzie.

55,263. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

55,264. Was your croft valued by the Crofters Commission?—Yes. [The Secretary.—The area of the croft is 4 acres 6 poles arable; 1 acre 3 roods 18 poles outrun; pasture 730 acres in 8 shares; old rent £4, 10s.; fair rent £3.]

55,265. What is it you wish to tell us?—I have nothing to say, but that I would like to get a share of the grazing like the rest.

55,266. Do you refer to the land between the two rivers of Gruinard?—That is what they want.

55,267. And is that what you are here to speak about too?—Yes.

55,268. Are you here as a delegate, or as an individual? Was there a meeting held among you?—Yes.

55,269. And were you asked to come and give evidence about the grazing?—Yes.

55,270. The land you have to speak of is the land we have heard so much of to-day already on the forest of Fisherfield, lying between these two rivers and up to Loch a' Mhadaidh?—Yes.

55,271. Mr Sutherland.—Do you agree with what has been said about that place?—Yes.

55,272. And have you anything to say in addition?—No.

55,273. Mr H. V. Maccallum, Solicitor, Inverness.—Are not you one of the men who got the farm of Udrigil broken up by Mr Bankes?—Yes.

55,274. You got a sixth share of that farm?—Yes.

55,275. What rent were you to pay?—£12.

55,276. How long ago is that?—Five years ago, I think.

55,277. Have you been paying the rent?—Yes, we pay the rent very nearly.

55,278. Have you given it up?—Yes.

55,279. Mr Gordon.—Why did you give it up?—Because we could not be honest, and it was not paying.

55,280. The rent was too high?—Yes.

55,281. Who fixed the rent?—Mr Bankes.

55,282. You did not offer the rent yourself, did you?—No: well, I was wanting it a little cheaper, but plenty others would have given the rent.

55,283. He would have got it from some other person at the time?—Yes.

55,284. And you find, after an experience of five years, that you could not pay the rent he had fixed?—Yes.

55,285. And, therefore, you left the place?—Yes.

55,286. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Do you know what the rent of Udrigil was before it was broken up into crofts?—It was very dear before that.

55,287. Did you get the whole farm of Udrigil?—Yes.

55,288. But you do not know what the rent of it was?—I could not say. [Mr Stewart.—It was £120 in 1881, and they got it at a gross rental of £51.]

55,289. Mr Sutherland.—What was the rent when they got it? [Mr Stewart.—£83.]

55,290. The Chairman.—What extent of arable

Poolewe, Ross-shire.

Alexander Mackenzie.

land had this man when he had this holding?—[Mr Stewart.—About 6¼ acres.]

55,291. What rate per acre arable did it pay? [Mr Stewart.—He paid £12, but there is a commonty of 1200 acres.]

55,292. You had to do with the apportioning of the ground, I suppose? [Mr Stewart.—No, my lord, they themselves agreed with Mr Bankes about it.]

55,293. But you were cognisant of it all?—I was.

55,294. Just tell us when you fixed the rents what rate you put upon the arable? [Mr Stewart.—It was not fixed that way.]

55,295. Was it not fixed by the simple process of taking a rate of so much per acre arable, and of so much for the cow on the hill, and putting the two together? [Mr Stewart.—No, not at all, in that way.]

55,296. How was it done? [Mr Stewart.—They gave a slump sum for the pasture and arable together.]

55,297. Was there not a calculated sum bringing out a rent which you or Mr Bankes believed to be a reasonable rent? [Mr Stewart.—Not that I am aware of].

55,298. Then, the rent may have been quite out of the question? [Mr Stewart.—No; they can give a good idea by the carrying properties of any land,—the number of sheep and cattle it carries.]

55,299. You are aware, of course, Mr Stewart, that a farm broken up into small holdings could not be expected to yield such an amount of rent for each holding as would make up the total formerly paid? [Mr Stewart.—Yes, I know that.]

55,300. And that the reasonable way to go to work is to assess the rate having regard to the size of the holding, and its particular locality and all about it,—assess the rate arable and then take in the carry of the hill? [Mr Stewart.—Yes.]

55,301. But you did not do that? [Mr Stewart.—No, we did not do that.]

55,302. Mr Sutherland.—Are you willing to go to the Crofters Commission to fix the rent now? [Mr Stewart.—It is in different hands now: these two shares have been let.]

55,303. But for those who still hold the shares? [Mr Stewart.—I am not prepared to say anything in the absence of Mr Bankes.]

55,304. You say Mr Bankes is unwell? [Mr Stewart.—Yes, he is unwell, he has gone to France for the benefit of his health.]

55,305. Mr Maccallum.—Did these tenants who gave up ask a reduction of rent before they left? [Mr Stewart.—Yes.]

55,306. And were refused, I suppose? [Mr Stewart.—Yes, Mr Bankes could not see his way to reduce it for them.]

Alexander Maclean.

ALEXANDER MACLEAN, Fisherman, Mellon-Udrigil (54)—examined.

55,307. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No, a fisherman.

55,308. Were you appointed as a delegate from the tenants of Mellon-Udrigil to come here and give evidence?—Yes.

55,309. Just tell us in your own way what you wish to submit to us?—What the rest were asking about Fisherfield,—the grazing for horses.

55,310. The grazing from the shore up to Loch-a'-Mhadaidh between the two rivers?—Yes.

55,311. That is what the tenants of Mellon-Udrigil are most anxious about?—Yes.

55,312. Do they concur in the views expressed by the crofters of Sand and Laide and other places?—Yes.

55,313. So that your evidence is to the same effect as we have heard already?—The same.

55,314. Do you wish to say anything further on the matter?—No

MURDO MACKENZIE, Crofter, Buaile-na-luib (63)—examined.

Poolewe, Ross-shire.

Murdo Mackenzie.

55,315. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

55,316. Your holding extends, according to the blue-book, to 5 acres arable and 1 acre outrun; there is a common pasture of 2442 acres common to the townships of Mellon-Charles, Buaile-na-luib, and Ormiscaig, divided into 80 shares, whereof 74 were dealt with by the Crofters Commission. The old rent of the croft was £4, 15s.; and the rent fixed £4, 2s.; the arrears were £9, 10s. 6d., of which £6 were ordered to be paid, and £3, 10s. 6d. cancelled. What is it you wish to say?—I only want a bit of that hill pasture.

55,317. The same land we have heard so much about,—the land of Fisherfield?—Yes.

55,318. Are you here speaking for yourself, or as a delegate?—As a delegate.

55,319. Whom do you represent?—I was appointed at the meeting held at Laide.

55,320. And you have the same statement to make to us with regard to the grazing of Fisherfield that we have heard from so many others?—Yes.

55,321. You have paid your arrears, I suppose?—Yes.

55,322. There was a special question raised in your case as to whether you were a crofter, and about a portion of land, which gave rise to a good deal of discussion?—Yes.

55,323. And you now wish that additional grazing?—I have to send my horse away every year.

55,324. Where do you send it to?—I have sent it to a place near Garve for the last three years.

55,325. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You are not a fisherman, are you?—I was, but I am getting too old, so I dropped it.

Angus Stewart.

ANGUS STEWART, Factor for Letterewe and Gruinard Estate (39)—examined.

55,326. The Chairman.—You are factor to Mr Bankes of Letterewe?—Yes.

55,327. For how long have you been factor?—For eleven years.

55,328. Were you formerly a farmer?—Yes.

55,329. And do you now hold the farm of Drumchork?—Yes.

55,330. Do you hold any other farm on Mr Bankes' estate?—No.

55,331. In the Order by the Crofters Commission dealing with the Drumchork enlargement of 1888, the farm is set down as rented at £93?—Yes.

55,332. In the valuation roll the rent is stated to be £80?—Yes.

55,333. What is the present rent?—The rent is £93.

55,334. How then is it entered at £80 in the valuation roll?—That deduction is made for the upkeep of the buildings which I have to maintain myself.

55,335. And an allowance of £13 is made for the upkeep?—Yes, for upkeep of the buildings, fences, etc.

55,336. Is that a provision in the lease?—No, it is not.

55,337. Is it a verbal arrangement, then?—I think it is mentioned in the lease, but I am not exactly sure.

55,338. Do you hold the farm under a written lease?—Yes.

55,339. Can you produce the lease, or a copy of it?—Yes.

55,340. I would like to see it. What is its endurance?—It is for twenty-one years, and eight years have run.

55,341. It is a current lease?—Yes.

55,342. Has it any breaks?—Yes, a break in five years.

55,343. I find from the blue-book that the lease has been produced to the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

55,344. And we can look at it again?—Yes.

55,345. Has this obligation with regard to the up-keep of buildings received effect in any other valuation roll besides the current one?—Yes, it is what people are legally entitled to,—to make deductions from the rental of house property for upkeep.

Poolewe, Ross-shire.

Angus Stewart.

55,346. And has it been in the valuation roll since the lease was entered into?—Yes.

55,347. Mr Sutherland.—The percentage, I understand, varies very much; but what is the percentage allowed in this locality for the upkeep of buildings?—It is very heavy.

55,348. It must be; I never heard of its being more than 5 per cent., but this appears to be much more?—I believe it is as heavy on this coast as in any part of Scotland, because of the storms to which the country is liable. Ten per cent. would not cover it in some cases.

55,349. The Chairman.—Does this difference cover the cost of repairs in your case?—Sometimes.

55,350. I understand you have a statement to submit?—Yes.

55,351. Kindly read it?—The estate is composed of a deer forest, two sheep farms, and about 120 crofts.

Prior to 1883 what now is a forest was occupied as large sheep runs. As the leases of these expired, it was impossible to get new tenants for them, and the proprietrix had no alternative but to take the sheep stock at valuation from the outgoing tenants and dispose these off by auction at a ruinous sacrifice.

Since then these sheep runs has been occupied as a deer forest at a rental of close on £2000, and the lessee, therefore, employs labour in the way of keepers, stalkers, gillies, boatmen, &c., to upwards of £700 annually, and pays about three-fourths of the entire rates applicable to occupiers of land on the estate.

There are not more than two acres arable and about five old arable in the whole forest, and these are mostly small detached pieces formerly attached to shepherds' houses. The lower portion or that nearest the sea-shore is very inferior grazing.

During the last few years the proprietrix cut down three farms and formed these into separate crofter holdings, or enlarged existing holdings, one of these the farm of Udrigil for which a rent of £120 was paid in 1881, with the best arable land on the estate, was formed into six separate holdings, with a commonty of about 1100 acres, at a gross rental of £51 or less than half the former rent. In November last three of these tenants asked to be relieved of their shares, and the proprietrix had the greatest difficulty in finding tenants for two of the crofts thus vacated, one of the new tenants having to be admitted from outside the estate, otherwise this croft would be unlet. The third tenant is still there; we did not wish to put him away, and we had no other croft to put him on.

The proprietrix is unable to let two other crofts, the area of each being five acres arable with one-fifth of 1000 acres commonty attached; also the farm of Little Gruinard comprising seven acres arable and about 2500 acres pasture, formerly let at a rent of £90. For these subjects not a single offer has been received. Five years ago some of the crofters applied for horse grazing, Mr Bankes offered the upper portion, or about one-half of this farm as a horse park for the estate; the scheme did not meet with the applicants' approval, and the offer was not accepted. The proposal was that Mr Bankes should give the fencing material, and they should cart it from the steamer, gather the stones, and do the working of it.

55,351A. Under supervision, I suppose?—Under supervision. Mr Bankes was to get a herd who would have charge of the park, and charge them £1 for every horse that would summer there.

55,352. That is for three months' grazing?—From April to the end of October. The following year seven applied and Mr Bankes offered them free grazing on this farm. That was because the fence was not proceeded with, and they had the horses at home; and several complaints reached him that they were going into other people's corn. He offered them free grazing if they would herd their horses on that farm. Now, although none of them have said so to-day, they went so far as to speak to a herd and try to engage him for it; and I can produce the herd if you wish to speak to him, when you visit the ground. Mr Bankes offered them free grazing for their horses, the only condition being that they should herd them, but this offer was also declined.

(Signed) Angus Stewart.

Poolewe, Ross-shire.

Angus Stewart.

55,353. You say that the forest previously consisted of farms; how many farms?—The farms of Fisherfield, Letterewe, and Ardlair; three farms.

55,354. What was the rent of Fisherfield farm?—£750.

55,355. And of Letterewe farm?—£350.

55,356. And Ardlair?—£80.

55,357. Were they all grazing farms?—Yes.

55,358. To what do you attribute the difficulty of those tenants in Udrigil who left their holdings getting on well?—I believe the holding was too large. I do not think a crofter is capable of looking after more than three or four acres of arable land.

55,359. When you say a crofter, I take it you mean a crofter in the townships round this quarter?—Quite so.

55,360. That is the district you know most of?—Yes.

55,361. When you say 'not capable' do you mean by that that what he has always been accustomed to has been a holding where he supplements the produce by his labour?—Yes.

55,362. That is the sort of thing their minds have been brought up to?—Yes, and if a crofter leaves his home in search of labour, then the croft is neglected. If it is no larger than four acres or so, the wife and family are usually able to take care of it in his absence; but if it is larger than that, the place is often in ruins when the crofter returns; everything is not kept as it should be and the consequence is that there must be a loss.

55,363. Is it your opinion that what we have sometimes called self-sustaining holdings, i.e., holdings by which a crofter might live, are not holdings in the view of the crofters in this quarter?—The land is not capable of sustaining a crofter unless he could get about 30 acres arable, such as we have here, and about 2000 acres of the kind of pasture we have. Unless he could get that, he cannot live all the year without doing something else. It is impossible; I have tried it and I know by experience what it is.

55,364. What rent would you put upon the 50 acres arable and 2000 acres pasture? What rent do you suppose it would pay?—I would put between £80 and £90 on it.

55,365. You do not refer to a £30 rent?—No, I do not, because I don't think the arable land we have here or the pasture we have here at a rent of £30 would be capable of keeping a man engaged all the year, or paying him for what he had invested.

55,366. You do not think a man who had a holding fairly rented at £30 could have land in this quarter by which he could live and have a profit?—No, I do not.

55,367. You say you have tried it?—Yes.

55,368. Where did you try it?—I had the farm of Little Gruinard for seven years.

55,369. What is the extent of it?—The extent there is only seven acres arable.

55,370. And how much grazing?—About 2500 acres grazing.

55,371. What rent did you pay?—I paid £70, and I found it was a loss four years to every one year of profit.

55,372. You tried your best to work it to a profit?—I did, and I knew how to work it. Of course, I had not the extent of arable land that it required; the arable land is not in the country, that is the difficulty; it is not there to be got.

55,373. Had you all the arable land that you could get?—Yes.

55,374. How much would you have required suppose it had been there?—I would have required about 50 acres to work the hill grazing properly.

55,375. But could you not have got arable land from the landlord somewhere about that would have made up 50 acres?—No, there are not more than eight acres arable close to it, and these were in the hands of this man who had the farm of Fisherfield at that time.

55,376. What was his name?—Mr Scott.

55,377. Do you base the conclusion you have stated to us on your experience in Little Gruinard?—Yes, I do, and upon the kind of climate we have for crops.

55,378. You mean rain?—Yes, rain.

55,379. Now, about the horse park,—were not the conditions a little unusual?—No; the cost of getting the material first would be about £300.

55,380. You mean the material for the fence?—For the fence.

55,381. Was it not a condition that the horse was to be sent up to the grazing by the estate, or a servant of the estate?—Yes.

55,382. And the crofter, the owner of the horse, had no right to go and look after the horse when it was on the grazing?—No, because there was a herd supplied there to look after the horses.

55,383. By the estate?—By the estate.

55,384. Don't you think these conditions were a little invidious or odious?—No; if you were to allow every crofter to roam after his own horse, you would not have a horse in the park.

55,385. But could you not have proposed that while they could not all get there, they might have appointed a small committee of two or three of their number to attend to their horses?—From all the experience I have had of crofters' committees I have never seen them work. I don't think there is one committee on our estate, though they have tried over and over again to have a committee.

55,386. Doubtless you are aware that the legislature specially authorises and recognises the formation of such committees under the Act of 1891?—Yes, my lord, and I supplied them with copies of that Act.

55,387. If the legislature recognises these committees, don't you think an estate manager might do so too?—Yes, I say it is a very proper thing, but I cannot get them to do it.

55,388. Did you not think of trying it?—I did; I put the Act into their hands.

55,389. For these horses?—To regulate everything.

55,390. Supposing they had appointed a committee to look after these horses instead of the herd, would you have agreed to that?—Yes, we would have agreed to any reasonable proposal, but they never came to us with any proposal.

55,391. I gather from the tone they take about it that they felt these conditions to be somewhat disagreeable?—If they could get grazing on more favourable terms, there is no doubt they would prefer it; but, of course, first of all, the fence had to be put there, and it would have cost about £300; they had to do the carriage and the haulage and the erecting, which was a good deal of labour. Then Mr Bankes would require a little rent for the land; he could not give the land for nothing, and he could not invest £300 without getting some return for it.

55,392. There is another matter I want to mention. There seem to be materials for coming to some friendly arrangement about this; there was the old application of 1888 for a part of Drumchork, and the present proposition submitted by so many crofters from different townships for a part of what is now the forest of Fisherfield?—Yes.

55,393. Would you not be disposed to recommend Mr Bankes to consider some such assignment of land as would meet these wants?—He is very willing to give Little Gruinard.

55,394. What is the extent of it?—Two thousand five hundred acres.

55,395. How is it occupied at present?—The proprietrix has it in her own hands.

55,396. Is it under sheep?—Yes.

55,397. That is the farm you tried yourself?—Yes, I had it for seven years.

55,398. Is it as good grazing as Fisherfield?—It is the same grazing; I cannot see any difference.

55,399. Was there any proposal submitted to the crofters about that?—It is for the upper portion of that farm; it is there that Mr Bankes intended to put this horse park.

55,400. How far is it from the holdings of most of them?—It is quite close to First and Second Coast, but it will be about 3 or 3½ miles from the most distant. Mr Bankes has been friendly towards the crofters all along; he has cut up the farm of Udrigil, he has cut up Culchonich, and he has allowed them the Laide Parks, and allowed them to fix the fair rent. He tries to meet them in every way.

55,401. Mr Sutherland.—I think you stated that when the proprietrix changed the sheep farms into deer forests she did so at ruinous sacrifices?—Yes.

55,402. Why should that be?—Because the valuations of stock are generally higher than the prices to be got at sales or in the open market. Valuations are, as a rule, 5s. or 6s., and sometimes 10s., a head higher than they will realise in the open market.

55,403. We have heard something about that custom; but look at the matter in this way. You state that it was made into a deer forest because the rent for sheep farms had gone down?—Because it could not be let.

55,404. It could be let if you came low enough?—There was not a single offer.

55,405. Not at the rent you wanted?—We did not specify a rent at all; we invited offers.

55,406. Don't you think the rent would be supposed to be the old rent?—No, we asked for offers and got none.

55,407. But have you any reason to suppose that if you reduced the rent 60 per cent. you would not get offers?—I have reason to believe it.

55,408. We have heard evidence regarding the reductions of rent that had to be made, amounting to 30 per cent. in some cases?—Yes.

55,409. How long would it take at a reduced rent of say 30 per cent., before the proprietrix could recompense herself for the ruinous sacrifices you have referred to?—I don't quite understand the question.

55,410. She sold off the sheep stock at a loss; but she could continue to farm at a lower rent in order to avoid this ruinous sacrifice?—She was quite willing to accept a lower rent.

55,411. How long would it take, in your opinion, for the enhanced value as a sheep farm to recompense her for the ruinous sacrifice; or has she been recompensed already?—It is probable that she has.

55,412. What is the difference between it as a deer forest and as a sheep farm?—I could not say, because we did not get an offer for it as a sheep farm.

55,413. But take the last rent she got for it as a sheep farm?—£750.

55,414. What does she get for it as a deer forest?—Close on £2000.

55,415. For the same area?—For the farms rented at £750, £350, and £80, or £1180 in all. Instead of £1180 she gets £2000.

55,416. Was there a sporting value besides the sheep farm rent?—It was very precarious.

55,417. But if it were let for grouse, what did she get?—I am unable to give you the figures.

55,418. Would it bring you up to the present deer forest rent?—It would still be about £600 short.

55,419. What did the sacrifice she incurred in selling the sheep amount to?—To about £1700 on the Fisherfield farm, but I cannot give you the exact sum on the Letterewe and Ardlair farms.

55,420. So that taking these losses into account, I suppose she has profited very little by the transaction of turning the farms into deer forests?—But she was compelled to do so, because she did not get a single offer from any man.

55,421. Could not she continue the sheep farm after taking over the stock?—She could not continue it, not having the money. You cannot take over £20,000 worth of sheep stock and continue to work the farms, if you have not the money to do it.

55,422. Could she not have got the money advanced, if she wished to carry on the sheep farm?—If you go to the Jews and get money advanced, you know how they make you pay for it.

Poolewe, Ross-shire.

Angus Stewart.

55,423. You stated that the tenant of the deer forest paid three-fourths of the rates for all land in the parish?—Yes.

55,424. That means, of course, that he has three-fourths of the land in the parish?—No; it means that he pays three-fourths of the rental.

55,425. Because he has three-fourths of the land?—Not necessarily, he may not have three-fourths of the land, or anything like it.

55,426. Is he paying any more than he ought to pay?—There is no doubt that sporting rents are much higher than you can get from any one who works arable and pasture land as a farm; about double.

55,427. But this question of assessing rates upon deer forests is simply an indication of how the land is divided?—I do not see that.

55,428. If he only paid half the rent he pays, he would only pay half the rates?—Yes; but the sporting rent does not compare in any way with an agricultural rent, so in dividing the land the one would not compare with the other.

55,429. I should say the agricultural rent is fixed very much higher than any deer forest per acre,—treble?—I am not aware of that.

55,430. Do you mean that land which is rented at £1 an acre does not pay higher rates than land that is rented at only 2d. an acre, and is the proportion of rate assessable on that not higher?—The rates are paid according to the rent of the land.

55,431. So that three-fourths of the rates means three-fourths of the land?—Of the rent of the land.

55,432. How many besides this shooting tenant have land in the parish?—There are about 100 crofters on the Letterewe and Gruinard estates.

55,433. Are there any other farmers?—There is not a farm now except the one I own myself and the one in the hands of the proprietrix. There are some other shooting rents; the shooting of Drumchork, and some fishings.

55,434. Roughly stated, that means that one man has three-fourths of the land on the estate, and 130 families have got the other fourth?—He pays three-fourths of the rental, at any rate.

55,435. We take it that the rent represents the land. Then you said that those people who got Udrigil reclaimed it at less than half the former rent?—Yes, Mr Scott's rent.

55,436. Was that in 1881?—Yes, that was in 1881.

55,437. When did they get it?—They got it the year after the Crofters Commission was here: that would be 1889.

55,438. How was the land occupied between 1881 and 1889?—It was occupied by two tenants who went in after Mr Scott left, at a reduction of rent; it was let in the interval at £83.

55,439. The year 1881 I suppose represented very nearly the high-water mark of rental, did it not?—No.

55,440. Had rents begun to go down before that?—Yes, before then; from 1879 at latest.

55,441. The rent that was fixed by you for this extension holding was not the rent that was fixed by the Crofters Commission. Have you any reason to suppose that they might reduce that rent in proportion as they reduced the old rents?—I don't know what they would do.

55,442. Seeing that is so, what objection could you have to get it fixed by the Crofters Commission?—Of course it was Mr Bankes who did it voluntarily.

55,443. But do you know any reason why it should not have been done?—There was no reason so far as I know.

55,444. It was not a rent that was fixed by the Crofters Commission at any rate?—No; under the Act I don't know that the Crofters Commission could deal with it.

55,445. They could deal with it I suppose by consent of parties?—By consent, just as they did with the Laide Parks.

55,446. But the consent was not given, I presume?—It was never asked by the crofters.

55,447. And they never thought of taking the initiative?—No, we thought we could arrange the rents ourselves.

55,448. But the result of the previous arrangement was that the Crofters Commission reduced crofter rents?—Yes.

55,449. You said there were several vacant tenancies for which no application was made. Do you know the provision in the Act for consolidating holdings as they fall vacant?—Yes.

55,450. Is your preference for that consolidation, or for getting new tenants?—Our preference is for consolidating the crofts.

55,451. Do you want to consolidate those that are vacant now?—Yes, we would let these two crofts to the township if they would take them.

55,452. Have they applied for them?—No, they will not accept them. We have consolidated about eight or nine crofts since the fair rents have been fixed.

55,453. Did you divide them?—We divided them, and we gave them sometimes to two or three of the adjoining crofts.

55,454. Would not the fact that you are in favour of consolidation have prevented offers being made for these vacancies?—I don't think it could, when they knew that the adjoining townships would not accept it, and when posters were put up that these were vacant. Any man that wanted land should apply then.

55,455. But if it is looked upon as the right under the Act of other tenants to get that added to their holdings, there might be some prejudice against applying for it?—There is no prejudice that I can see with any of them; if they require it they will come and ask for it. I have seen no such prejudice among our crofters.

55,456. They are anxious to get more land, then?—They are anxious to get it where they would like.

55,457. There is a great demand for land?—No; if there were a great demand for land, they would take the Little Gruinard farm.

55,458. You said there was a demand for it?—They are very anxious to get it where they like, but not where we have it to give.

55,459. You gave us your own experience as a crofter, and I think you will admit that the proportion of arable land to grazing was entirely too small; it is not well proportioned if only 7 acres of arable go to 2500 acres of pasture?—No, I quite agree with that; I told you I would have required 50 acres to work that place properly.

55,460. You stated that neither were your offers with regard to the horse grazing park accepted?—Yes.

55,461. We had two witnesses here to-day who agreed to your terms?—Yes, but you have several who did not.

55,462. But you could have given it to those who agreed?—You could not expect that the proprietor would lay out £300 for fencing without getting the number of offerers to make use of the park. If you had £300 in your pocket you would not throw them out on a barren hillside with the chance of having only three horses to put into that park.

55,463. I would consider whether it was necessary; I would consider alternative schemes?—We waited for alternative schemes, but never got any proposals from them yet.

55,464. May I ask you whether you confined yourself to the horses when you were thinking of such schemes?—How many horses are there in all the townships?—I do not know.

55,465. I think your evidence to-day went to show that there are not many?—I cannot say; they have not always the same number when they work the crofts. They will have more than appears from the evidence to-day; perhaps double.

55,466. That was to deal with stock they already have?—They have these horses, double or three times the number that was given in evidence. There is no doubt that they require a horse park, and there is no doubt Mr Bankes would be very willing to give it, but the question is how is it to be fenced?

55,467. Why must it be fenced? Are sheep farms fenced?—No.

Poolewe, Ross-shire. Angus Stewart.

55,468. Why then should a horse park require to be fenced?—Because there is the greatest difference between 40 horses and 1000 sheep. One shepherd can command 1000 sheep, but it would require ten shepherds to command 40 horses.

55,469. In the park?—Without a park; the park itself would command them.

55,470. But you do not expect a horse to be driven like a dog?—You won't find any cattle so difficult to drive as horses, except where they are attached to a particular farm.

55,471. But you know that as a rule, sheep farms are never fenced off from each other?—Yes, I know.

55,472. But all deer forests seem to be. Could you explain to us why it is necessary to fence off a deer forest?—To prevent the deer from leaving it, or any others from getting in.

55,473. To prevent the stock mixing?—Yes; and to prevent sheep straying into it. [Mr Shaw Stewart.—And to prevent the deer getting on to crofters' crops, sometimes?—Yes.] You cannot compare a sheep stock with horses that may come from different townships. If you gather together 40 horses, each from a different place, you need not expect that they will remain on any pasture. Ten shepherds would not keep them.

55,474. Have you anything to say with regard to this offer that you made and that never came back to you; how does that happen?—I cannot account for it; I was waiting for it and Mr Bankes was waiting, and next year when six or seven applied, Mr Bankes said:—'Well, 'there is the grazing, you never came back with the 'paper you got; if you can get a herd go and get one 'for the land.'

55,475. When was the land of Udrigil given?—The year after the Crofters Commission fixed the fair rent, —1889, I think.

55,476. The necessity would not be greater then than at any previous time, I suppose?—No.

55,477. But the land was not given till then?—The land was in other peoples' hands till then; the place fell vacant at that time.

55,478. But it had fallen vacant I have no doubt at several times before that?—Yes, but two crofters got it, Murdo Gunn and William Mackenzie. The latter is a merchant and the former is a cattle-dealer, but they are crofters all the same. It was in 1883 that these two got it.

55,479. Mr Munro.—I think you mentioned that the sheep farms brought in a gross rental of £1180 before they were converted into a deer forest?—Yes.

55,480. And they now bring in a rental of?—Close to £2000.

55,481. Now, without trying to fix you down to a definite sum, what would these forests fetch if re-let as sheep farms to-day?—I don't know that they could be let at all to-day. Farmers have got so disgusted with what they suffer from valuations that they do not care to go into large sheep farms.

55,482. Could they not be let at a reduction of rent?—Well, when Fisherfield was advertised in the newspapers, we had not a single offer, and it is the best farm of the three.

55,483. And no inquiries?—No inquiries, and about 10,000 sheep to be taken over by the proprietrix. Some of these were valued at 38s. for the ewes and 49s. the wedders.

55,484. That is when taken over by you?—Yes.

55,485. In what year was that?—At Whitsunday 1893.

55,486. I suppose it is quite usual for sheep to be valued at considerably more upon the ground than they would fetch in the market?—Yes, they are worth 3s. or 4s. more, being acclimatised to the place; they do not stray, as new sheep bought in the market would.

55,487. So that whether it was the farmer or the landlord who was taking over the sheep, he would have to pay the extra price?—Quite so.

55,488. Could you not say now that any rent could be got for these farms if re-let for sheep purposes?—Our experience with the three farms was that not a rent could be got.

55,489. Not even an inquiry?—Not even an inquiry; and I believe the same is the case with a good many sheep runs throughout the Highlands at present.

55,490. But if re-let, I suppose they would be re-let at a very considerable reduction?—At a very low rent indeed. Farmers will not go into a large sheep farm to-day without having it at a very low rent.

55,491. Then that goes to show that there is a very strong temptation offered to all proprietors to convert sheep farms into deer forests where they are adapted for such a purpose?—Some of them have no choice; unless they have the money to work the land themselves as a sheep farm. They must convert it into what will yield a rent of some kind. They cannot keep on shepherds and take such an immense stock as that unless they have the necessary funds; they are compelled to sell off the stock.

55,492. So that it is a mere matter of time when all sheep farms will have to be converted into deer forests, at that rate?—Yes; in the case of those proprietors who have no money to work them.

55,493. But even supposing that they had to take them over, if they had to work them at a loss, would they not still have the same temptation to convert the land into deer forest?—Quite likely.

55,494. Then in regard to your own farm, did I understand you to say that your actual rent was £93, and that you are entered in the valuation roll at only £80?—Yes.

55,495. And that the £13 of reduction is allowed in respect of your having to keep up the buildings?—Yes.

55,496. Is that a common practice in the county?—There is no reduction in the rent; the reduction is in the rates. I have to pay the former rent.

55,497. You pay £93 to the proprietor, and you are entered in the valuation roll for £80?—Yes.

55,498. Is that done by arrangement with the Assessor for the county?—It is according to the Act; there is an Act for that purpose.

55,499. Does a crofter get a similar reduction for upkeep of his buildings when he is entered in the valuation roll?—No, he does not.

55,500. Is not there some inconsistency there?—You cannot compare a crofter's house with a large steading and a farm house.

55,501. That is a mere matter of proportion?—Of course it is.

55,502. Then does the Assessor not know that you pay £93 of rent?—Yes, he is aware of it; at least, I understand so. It is a general custom in the place.

55,503. Do you, in returning your schedule to him, say that you pay a rent of £93, but that you claim £13 of rebate in respect of the upkeep of the buildings?—I don't know that I wrote it in the schedule; but I have no doubt I had a talk with him when he was about.

55,504. Could it not go into the schedule thus:—Rent £93; rebate for upkeep £13; net rent £80?—There are no such columns in the schedule.

55,505. It is easy to specify it without a column?—There is another difference between a crofter and a farmer; the crofter's house is his own property.

55,506. Still he has to keep it up?—Yes.

55,507. But as the matter now stands you are in a privileged position, the crofter gets no rebate and you do. Now, do all people in the county get a similar rebate?—This deduction is general on large buildings of that sort.

55,508. As a matter of fact, it is not entered in the schedule that you return to the Assessor that this rebate is taken off by you?—No.

55,509. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—You are factor on the estate?—I am manager on the estate.

55,510. Do you make the returns to the Assessor?—I do.

55,511. Don't you know whether you give the exact rent or not?—I know that I did not give it in writing. The Assessor comes down and we talk over the matters.

55,512. But he sends a schedule to every factor to be filled up?—Yes.

Poolewe, Ross-shire. — Angus Stewart.

55,513. And do you not know whether in that schedule you put in the full rent or not?—I know I did not.

55,514. Then you make this deduction yourself?—Yes; and there is that deduction made on slated crofters' houses on the property.

55,515. You make the reductions?—Yes, on slated houses. It was done on the farm of Udrigil and on Aird and all other such houses.

55,516. Are the deer forests on your estate put down in the valuation roll at £2000?—Not £2000, but quite close to it.

55,517. They are let, are they?—Yes, £1930, I think it is.

55,518. What is the gross rental?—£1930.

55,519. But what is paid by the tenant?—That is the gross rent; there are no deductions there.

55,520. Are there no deductions for buildings or for payment of wages?—The buildings are not on this estate; they are on the estate of Mrs Bankes, Letterewe.

55,521. Then the sum that is put down in the valuation roll is the exact sum paid by the shooting tenant?—Yes, nearly.

55,522. The Chairman.—Suppose that you chose,—I am not suggesting that you would,—but suppose you had chosen arbitrarily to say that the deductions should be £25 instead of £13, would there have been any check upon that form of transaction, suppose you had put in £70 instead of £80?—Yes, I think there would have been a check, because he would not consider it was a fair rent for the place.

55,523. Suppose it was stated to him as the actual rent?—He is generally very good at checking, I assure you.

55,524. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Then do you account for it in this way, that you put down £80, because you thought he would take that as a reasonable sum?—No, but because the difference was expended yearly, and over it sometimes, in the repairs to these houses and fences.

55,525. Just in your own opinion?—Not in my own opinion, but, in fact; the cost of repairs would average £10 to £12.

55,526. And you think that whatever you spend on houses you are entitled to deduct from the rent to be put in the valuation roll?—Yes.

55,527. And you think he does not know the exact rent you pay?—I think he does.

55,528. Did you give it to him?—I did not give it to him in writing.

55,529. Where would he get it then?—He comes round every year and inquires into everything that he does not quite understand, and he could have asked for the lease.

55,530. But if he gets a wrong return how is he to make up the roll—if you put down £80 instead of £93, how is he to make up a proper roll, and don't you seem to constitute yourself the Assessor—don't you seem to be taking over yourself the function of Assessor by making these deductions without consulting the Assessor?—I don't know that I do.

55,531. You said that you have consolidated a number of crofts since the Crofters Commission was here. How many crofts have disappeared since then?—I cannot give you the exact number without referring to my books.

55,532. But you can give us a rough idea; did you say eight or nine?—Yes.

55,533. Was anything paid in compensation to these outgoing tenants?—Yes; their houses and everything they have are valued, and the amount of the valuation is paid by the proprietor.

55,534. Do you know how much has been paid in compensation to crofters in these holdings?—No, but I could give in a supplement stating that.

55,535. Now with regard to Udrigil, first of all it was made one of the objections you see, against the granting of an enlargement that 'the respondent, Mr 'Bankes, has offered and still offers the applicants the 'farm of Udrigil for enlargement of their holdings;' and then I see the Commissioners put in their Note dismissing the application—'The respondent seems not 'insensible to the reasonableness in itself of the applica- 'tion for enlargement of holdings, and accordingly offered 'to the applicants the farm of Udrigil in response to 'their claim.' How did they not get the farm of Udrigil?—Because they would not come forward and live in Udrigil.

Poolewe, Ross-shire. — Angus Stewart.

55,536. It was as an extension of their grazings that they wanted it; they were not to come and live in it?—But if there was any congestion, that would relieve the congested townships.

55,537. But you see it was offered as an enlargement of holdings, and one of the reasons why the application was dismissed is that they were likely to get it as an enlargement of their holdings. Now, I want to know why that was not carried through?—I think that when these crofters have been taken out from among the applicants in these townships that would enlarge the remaining crofts.

55,538. But that is not the point at all. You see you made this an objection to their getting an extension from your own farm, that you were offering another farm for extension of holdings. It is put on record. Now it is right to find out what you did in order to carry out this that is in the Note; why you did not try to carry it out. If you did so, let us hear what you did? (No answer.)

55,539. The only thing is that you did not try to carry out this which the Commissioners lay so much stress upon?—I did not know that they would lay so much stress upon it. I do not remember the very words of Mr Bankes' offer, but I have no doubt he had it in his mind to give up the farm at that time; but whether he was going to give it as enlargement of holdings is quite another thing.

55,540. But you do not remember that it was put down in the record in that way?—I don't know; there is no doubt he was willing to give it to crofters.

55,541. But not as an extension of holdings?—No, not as an extension of holdings, except in the way I have indicated.

55,542. The Chairman.—But if I may interrupt, I suppose that the case put before the Crofters Commission was, among other things, that he was prepared to consider favourably a proposal for the extension of holdings by taking the farm of Udrigil?—Yes, I suppose that would be so.

55,543. I am correct in so saying, I think?—I cannot remember the words exactly, My Lord.

55,544. And that, of course, is quite a different thing from new holdings altogether?—Yes, quite a different thing.

55,545. It was no good telling the Crofters Commission that you were prepared to make new holdings, because they have no powers to make new holdings as a Commission, but only power to grant extension of existing holdings?—No.

55,546. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—You see it is stated here on record that Mr Bankes offered the applicants the farm of Udrigil in response to their claim; and the fourth objection that you have is 'that the respondent 'has offered and still offers the applicants the farm 'of Udrigil for enlargement of their holdings?—Well, the farm of Aird has been given them to enlarge their holdings since then.

55,547. It is not mentioned?—No, but it was after that.

55,548. But that enlargement has been given, I think you said, under the Crofters Act. Had they to build houses, those who got the farm of Udrigil?—Yes, three on the back, but those on this side had not.

55,549. Who were the three who gave up their holdings,—those who built, or those who did not?—Those who did not build. One of them did not leave, because we had not another croft vacant to give him.

55,550. Are the two who still remain paying their rent, or how are they succeeding?—Only one of these three has remained.

55,551. But there are two who did not give up their holdings at all; how are these succeeding?—Only one that did not give up.

55,552. Were there not five who got the farm, of whom three have given up, and two remained?—Six got the farm; the three on the back did not ask to be removed.

Poolewe, Ross-shire.

Angus Stewart.

55,553. How are they getting on?—They are getting on very well; one of them is a little back.

55,554. And have they built their own houses?—They have.

55,555. Without, of course, the security that the Crofters Act gives?—Yes.

55,556. Have they leases?—No.

55,557. Mr Gordon.—Where was the part of Gruinard which you offered them for a horse park? Was it to the south of Loch-na-h-Uidhe?—I will point it out on the map.

55,558. I see that the part you offered them for a horse park was to the south of Loch-na-h-Uidhe?—Yes.

55,559. What sort of land is that?—Just the common black land of the country, the same as from here to Gairloch.

55,560. There appear to be a good many 'dubh 'lochs' in it?—Yes.

55,561. Is it rocky ground?—Some rocky and other places mossy.

55,562. It would be rather inaccessible; there is no road to it?—There is no road through any of the hills there, but you can go with a horse.

55,563. Do you say that Mr Bankes is still anxious to oblige these crofters with horse ground?—I think so.

55,564. Does this land which he offered them adjoin the forest?—The river separates it from the forest.

55,565. Otherwise there is no fence?—No.

55,566. And if you were to take the sheep off that ground, the deer would get on to it?—Yes, some of them would.

55,567. Is there any special objection why he should not give the horse park at the north end of the farm, where there is a public road?—I believe Mr Bankes would give the whole farm.

55,568. But would he give the horse park at the foot of the farm?—I did not question him about that.

55,569. Would you not have thought that a more advisable arrangement?—Yes, I don't see any difference between the lower and the higher part of it, except the fencing. There is the difference of sending them there.

55,570. Judging from the appearance of the map the ground would seem to be better, but the great point is that it would be more accessible; and as a matter of fact, if it is to be fenced it would be more easily fenced?—I don't know that it would, because you have the county road running through the lower portion, and if you come through that way you will see it would be more expensive to fence it.

55,571. But suppose you were to give between the public road and the sea as an extension to the Second Coast people, and the south part lying to the south of the road up to Loch-na-h-Uidhe to Sand and the other townships, would that not suit the crofters better?—Yes, it would, except for the cost of fencing.

[ADJOURNED.]

SIXTY-FOURTH SITTING.

Ullapool.

ULLAPOOL, September 10, 1894

Present:—

DAVID BRAND, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
MICHAEL HUGH SHAW STEWART, Esq., M.P.
ANGUS SUTHERLAND, Esq., M.P.
GEORGE GORDON, Esq.
REV. MALCOLM MACCALLUM.
WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

THOMAS MACKENZIE, Doire-nam-Muc (29). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

Thomas Mackenzie.

55,572. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—I speak for Hector Mackenzie.

55,573. Are you the son of Hector Mackenzie?—I am his sister's son: Hector Mackenzie is not at home.

55,574. Do you live with Hector Mackenzie?—Yes, in the same house. [The Secretary.—Hector Mackenzie's croft extends to 5 acres 15 poles arable; 4 acres 1 rood 17 poles outrun; and a share in the common of 1211 acres; the old rent was £6, 15s.; and the fair rent is £5, 10s.; arrears £1, 3s. 9½d., which were cancelled].

55,575. What is it you wish to say on behalf of Hector Mackenzie?—We are fenced in, and the land was taken from us.

55,576. When was the fence put up?—Last year.

55,577. Between what two points does it run?—It runs between the river Strath and the river Gruinard.

55,578. It was put up, I suppose, by the proprietor?—Yes.

55,579. Was it erected on his own ground?—It is on the boundary.

55,580. But in passing along the boundary does it trespass upon your grazing?—No.

55,581. Before that, did the crofters' sheep cross the march?—They did.

55,582. And now they are obliged to keep to their own side of the fence?—They cannot get past that now.

55,583. The fence does not take any land from you that you had before?—The crofters in olden times had the land.

55,584. But does it deprive you of any land which the crofters in the township had under the Act of Parliament?—No.

55,585. Is that the whole matter of which you have come here to speak?—That is all. We expected to get a piece of the land at Gruinard.

55,586. Was there an application for enlargement?—There was.

55,587. What has become of it?—We have got nothing as yet.

55,588. Has the application been disposed of?—We wrote a letter to the Commissioners.

55,589. I understand from the Secretary there was no application to the Crofters Commission for enlargement from Gruinard, and that the letter received was the letter offering to give evidence here to-day.—It was to get some more land that we appear here to-day.

55,590. Where do you think there is available land?—In the boundary for the sheep.

55,591. Where the fence is?—Yes.

55,592. What is on the offside of the fence, is it forest, or sheep farm?—Deer forest.

55,593. It is part of the forest of Dundonnell, I suppose?—It is part of the forest of Gruinard.

55,594. Is that land on the further side of the fence?—It is.

55,595. Did it formerly form part of the farm of Mungasdale or Monkcastle?—Yes.

Ullapool. Thomas Mackenzie.

55,596. Do you happen to know when it was afforested?—I think it was eight years ago.

55,597. Do you know how many acres were afforested?—No, I do not know. The whole estate of Gruinard is a forest to-day.

55,598. What extent of land on the farm of Mungasdale was put into the forest of Gruinard?—The whole of the farm.

55,599. What was the area of the farm?—I cannot say.

55,600. Do you remember the last tenant of the farm?—I do.

55,601. What was his name?—Mr Murray.

55,602. What rent did he pay?—I cannot say.

55,603. Do you know what stock he kept?—No, but it was a large stock.

55,604. The case you submit to us, then, is that your township grazing is too small, and that you desire us to consider as to an assignment of land from the farm of Mungasdale now afforested?—Yes, there are people from another township, Badcall, who want a piece along with us from the same forest.

55,605. How many crofters are in Doire-nam-Muc,—how many families?—Thirteen families.

55,606. And can you tell me how many cottars there are?—None at all.

55,607. How many families are in Badcall?—I cannot say; there are delegates present from Badcall.

55,608. Then, is this desire for land from the townships of Doire-nam-Muc and Badcall?—Yes.

55,609. And from no other township?—There are some from Badluachrach here as well, but they will speak for themselves.

55,610. Are they to speak about the same farm?—The same farm.

55,611. These three townships, Doire-nam-Muc, Badcall, and Badluachrach are all the townships that are represented here asking for land from the farm of Mungasdale?—Yes.

55,612. Is that the whole matter that you wish to submit to us?—That is all.

55,613. Was Hector Mackenzie appointed a delegate?—He got a letter, but he was not at home.

55,614. But was your uncle appointed a delegate, at a meeting?—No. There was a meeting, but no one in particular was appointed.

55,615. Was there a meeting at which it was arranged that Hector Mackenzie should come forward?—We have all appeared here; we thought we would all have to speak.

55,616. In your conversations about land, before coming to this meeting, was there anything said between you about new holdings?—We were talking among ourselves about getting so much of the Gruinard land within the fence.

55,617. Can you tell me what extent of stock is kept on the 1211 acres of township pasture?—I cannot say.

55,618. Can you tell me how the stock that is kept there in summer is wintered?—About one-half of them died for want of proper grazing.

55,619. And how were those that survived wintered?—On the crofts at home.

55,620. Does the township keep both a sheep stock and a cattle stock?—Both.

55,621. And do you keep horses?—One horse.

55,622. On each croft?—There are about seven horses to the township.

55,623. Mr Shaw Stewart.—How many shares are there in the grazing?—Every crofter in the township has a share.

55,624. And how many sheep has each?—I cannot say as to the number of sheep.

55,625. Is there no limit?—No; they were talking about a limit.

55,626. I suppose it would be much better for the stock if there was a limit for each?—It would be better for the stock; we have not the grazing to keep the stock.

55,627. Is the fence on the north side of the road, on the top of the hill?—Between Little Lochbroom and—

55,628. Does it run from east to west?—Yes.

Ullapool. Thomas Mackenzie.

55,629. If the fence ran along the roadside, would that give you sufficient grazing?—No, it would not.

55,630. Can you tell me how many sheep there are on the farm of Mungasdale?—There are no sheep to-day; only deer.

55,631. Can you tell me how many horses there are altogether on the grazing in connection with the three townships?—I cannot say; there is one in Badcall.

55,632. And how many in Badluachrach?—I cannot say; they pay the summering for their horses.

55,633. Mr Sutherland.—Can you tell us how many families are along the whole of the south side of Little Lochbroom?—I do not know how many.

55,634. How many townships are there?—Six.

55,635. What are their names?—Camus-nan-Gall, Ardessie, Badbea, Badcall, Doire-nam-Muc, and Badluachrach.

55,636. You cannot tell us how many families are in all these townships?—No.

55,637. Can you tell the acres of land they have got among them?—No, I cannot say.

55,638. Do you yourself remember when the farm of Mungasdale was cultivated partly?—I do not remember, but there is another man from the township.

55,639. Do you remember when the land that is now lying waste at Mungasdale was cultivated by any person?—Yes, I do remember that.

55,640. How many years ago?—I cannot say.

55,641. Mr Gordon.—On what estate is the farm of Mungasdale?—On Mr Catton's estate.

55,642. And on whose estate is Badluachrach?—On Dundonnell estate.

55,643. Did the fence which they have erected run along the march between the two estates?—The fence is on the march.

55,644. Then, the land which you are presently applying for is upon Fisherfield or Gruinard?—It is part of Fisherfield; it is part of Gruinard Forest.

55,645. Where was the march formerly between Mungasdale and the forest?—The old people here know it, but I myself do not know it.

55,646. Do you know the ground?—I know the ground well.

55,647. Where do you suggest that the march between the crofting land and the forest should be?—It should be taken to bits so that people should have some land.

55,648. Where would you suggest that the march fence should be shifted to? Do you know a loch above Doire-nam-Muc called Loch-a'-Bhad-Choille?—That loch is near the road in our own land.

55,649. Does your present pasture go up to that loch or past it?—Our land goes up to that loch.

55,650. Does it go beyond that loch?—It does.

55,651. Does it take in Loch-an-t-Seilich?—One end of it is on our ground and the other is in the forest ground.

55,652. Is Loch-an-t-Seilich the present march between Doire-nam-Muc and the forest?—There is no fence at yon end of the loch.

55,653. Where does the fence cross from Little Lochbroom to the south-west?—The boundary is just at our crofts, at Lochan-na-Cairill.

55,654. But there is a considerable extent of ground between Loch-a'-Bhad-Choille and the sea opposite Gruinard island which you have not at present?—That is part of the forest.

55,655. And is that the land that you wish to get?—It is.

55,656. Does the pasture of the crofting township of Badbea go up to the top of Sail-Mhor?—I think it does.

ALEXANDER MACKENZIE, Crofter, Badluachrach (40)—examined. Alexander Mackenzie.

55,657. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

55,658. Was your rent fixed by the Crofters Commission when they were here?—Yes.

55,659. What was your former rent?—£6.

55,660. And your new rent?—£4, 4s. [The Sec- retary.—Murdo Mackenzie's croft has 5 acres 0 roods 29 poles arable; 25 poles outrun; and share of 1321 acres of common pasture; the old rent was £6 and the rent is £4, 4s.; arrears were £9, 0s. 6d., whereof new £6, 0s. 6d. were cancelled, and £3 ordered to be paid].

Ullapool. Alexander Mackenzie.

55,661. Is your grazing held in common by Badluachrach, Doire-nam-Muc, and Badcall, or have you a township grazing of your own?—Yes, each township is clear.

55,662. Your township grazing is held by the township itself and extends to 1321 acres?—One thousand six hundred acres.

55,663. Were you appointed as a delegate to attend this sitting?—Yes.

55,664. What is the view you wish to lay before us?—I wish to lay before you that Badluachrach was spoiled when the crofters were sent from Mungasdale. There were only nine at first in Badluachrach; my father was born and bred in Mungasdale and my grandfather before him, and the land was taken from them in Mungasdale except at the last year they got some patches for potatoes. My father then got a croft in Badluachrach when there were only nine crofts there, and it is now divided into 33 crofts.

55,665. But I suppose with an extended area of land?—Not a bit extra beyond what the nine had.

55,666. What was formerly occupied by nine crofters is now occupied by thirty-three?—Yes.

55,667. Do you happen to know when that occurred?—No, I was not born at the time.

55,668. But it happened, I suppose, in your father's time?—Yes.

55,669. Were all the crofters that had been in Mungasdale transferred to Badluachrach?—Most of them, except two.

55,670. How many were in Mungasdale?—Ten.

55,671. Eight of them went to Badluachrach?—Yes.

55,672. And the other two went somewhere else?—Yes.

55,673. Was Mungasdale then turned into a sheep grazing?—Yes.

55,674. That did not happen in your day, but perhaps you can tell us about what date it occurred?—Yes, about 44 years ago.

55,675. And ever since then till eight years ago or so, this farm has been held as a sheep farm?—Yes.

55,676. But now it is turned into forest?—Yes.

55,677. Was the last witness correct in saying that it was turned into forest eight years ago?—Yes, the lowest part of the ground, but not the upper part. The march of the first forest came down about the middle of Loch-na-Sealg when Mr Murray had the farm.

55,678. That is an older afforestment than the afforestment of Mungasdale?—Yes.

55,679. What was the extent of land afforested eight years ago? Was it just the whole farm of Mungasdale as it then stood?—No, it was only what was above Lochan-na-Cairill; between that and Achanuaridh.

55,680. But you do not know the extent?—No, I cannot tell the number of acres.

55,681. What became of the farm-house?—The house and steading are going to ruins.

55,682. You wish us to consider as to whether the land which originally formed the Mungasdale township and afterwards the farm, and now the forest, should be in whole or in part re-assigned to the Badluachrach crofters?—Yes.

55,683. Are the crofters of Badluachrach and Doire-nam-Muc and Badcall ill off for grazing?—There is not a township in the whole estate of Dundonnell that was spoiled so very bad as Badluachrach, because all the Mungasdale crofters except two were driven into Badluachrach and so spoiled the place.

55,684. Did they get no extension of grazing when the people were brought from Mungasdale?—Not a bit, except the old marches.

55,685. Additional families were put there, but no additional land was given?—No.

55,686. Is that the only matter that you wish to put before us,—this question of the grazing?—Well, if it is impossible for us to get Mungasdale, we applied several times to Mr Purves for Gruinard Island.

55,687. How is Gruinard Island occupied at present?—By Mr Baring.

55,688. Is it part of the forest?—No, it is a rabbit-warren.

55,689. What answer was given to this application for Gruinard Island?—It was said that we would get a chance of it when the lease was out; but when we applied for it and made an offer, it had been given on lease to Mr Baring a second time, and Mr Purves gave it to a farmer from Lewis, Mr Sinclair.

55,690. And has Mr Sinclair got it at present?—Mr Baring has it.

55,691. Is it a suitable island for grazing purposes?—We had no summering for our horses in Badluachrach this year, and we did not know what to do with them. We could not get grazing for them on our own estate, and Mr Baring kindly gave us the grazing of our horses for £1 each on Gruinard island; and the horses are there at present.

55,692. Did you make any application for this land on the mainland, the farm of Mungasdale?—No, but when we heard that there were Royal Commissions appointed to break deer forests and sheep farms, we thought our chance was as good as the rest.

55,693. Would you say that the township of Badluachrach is congested,—that is to say, that there are too many families in it?—No mistake about that. In winter it is as black as Rotten Row, owing to the large numbers of people in the township tramping back and fore upon the small patches of land the crofters have.

55,694. How many ought to be in it, in your view?—There ought to be just the number there were in the olden times, nine.

55,695. You think the proper number is nine?—Yes.

55,696. Would you take out all the rest and put them somewhere else?—Yes.

55,697. Where would you put them?—There is plenty ground in Dundonnell, and all through the big farms.

55,698. Any ground they could get on that estate would put them, I suppose you think, in a much better position than they are in at present?—Yes, Badluachrach is a very rocky barren point, and it is impossible for any one to make his living the way they are situated at present: not even a road except a footpath that they got last year, and in winter you can hardly make out where it is.

55,699. Suppose new holdings were formed, say on the Dundonnell estate, or somewhere in the neighbourhood, could the tenants in Badluachrach take such holdings themselves without assistance?—Well, we would do our best.

55,700. Do you think they are able?—I think some are, but not all.

55,701. Would they be able to stock such new holding?—I cannot say: that would depend on how the rent might be fixed.

55,702. Are you yourself desirous of getting a new holding, or do you wish to remain where you are, with extended grazings?—Well, I would shift; but I could do as I am if I got an extension of grazing.

55,703. Mr Gordon.—What march would you propose for the south boundary of the crofters' grazing?—We would like to get from Lochan-na-Cairill, just where the forest fence joins that loch,—we would like to have what is on this side of Lochan-na-Cairill. The deer forest fence joins the upper end of the lochs.

55,704. How would you extend the boundary to the east of that, towards Sail-Mhor?—The fence fixes the boundary there already.

55,705. Would Loch-an-t-Seilich be in the middle of your ground in that case?—Just about the edge Doire-nam-Muc comes in to the east side of Loch-an-t-Seilich.

55,706. Then the boundary would be from Lochan na-Cairill to Loch-an-t-Seilich?—Yes.

55,707. Does the Doire-nan-Muc grazing go to the south of Loch-an-t-Seilich at present?—They have that place called Arishaig further on.

Ullapool.

Alexander Mackenzie.

55,708. Now, supposing you were to get this land, how would you propose to occupy it? Would your present stock be sufficient for it?—No, but we would try and stock it.

55,709. Have you any idea of a club stock in this country, or how it is worked?—It is not worked in our neighbourhood as yet.

55,710. Would you propose to occupy this ground along with the Doire-nam-Muc crofters, or would you suggest that whatever addition is made should be made as a township grazing?—We would take it either way, but I think Badluachrach ought to get it, as it is the people that came from Mungasdale who spoilt the grazing of Badluachrach.

55,711. This land that you propose would include the whole farm of Mungasdale?—It would include what is on this side of the Glen Burn.

55,712. Then, you do not want to speak as to anything further up Little Lochbroom side?—No.

55,713. If you got that land, would you be prepared to erect a fence, or is there at present fencing there?—It does not want a fence except a small bit from the end of that loch to Gruinard river. There is an old dyke above the road which could be easily repaired, adjoining the loch.

55,714. Do you propose that the extension of pasture should go down to the Gruinard river?—We would be content supposing it did not go down to the river; we do not want to interfere with the Gruinard marches.

55,715. Did the ground which your township formerly occupied ever go up as far as Loch-an-t-Seilich?—We have a narrow neck going up to Loch-an-t-Seilich, but our march does not come up further than the sky line of the watershed of Druim-nam-Fuath.

55,716. Mr Sutherland.—You said in reply to questions by the Chairman that the farm of Mungasdale was made out of small holdings?—Yes.

55,717. And the people who had these small holdings, I think you said, were sent down among you to Badluachrach?—Yes.

55,718. And after that, the farm of Mungasdale was allowed to go out of cultivation and made into a deer forest; is that the history of it?—Yes.

55,719. You surprised me when you said there were 33 families in Badluachrach?—There are 33 crofts and 25 families.

55,720. Then, there are more crofts than families?—Yes, a few of them have two crofts.

55,721. How did that happen?—Because some went abroad thinking they could make a better living of it, and the neighbour got the croft left vacant.

55,722. Then the sub-division was not made by the people themselves?—It was made by the late Hugh Mackenzie.

55,723. It was the proprietor who made the sub-division, and not the crofters?—It was the proprietor.

55,724. Did any of them when they came there first get holdings on the grazing of those who were there already, or did they get arable land ready made for them?—No, some of it was nothing but heather.

55,725. Did they make the arable land themselves out of the heather?—They did, some of them.

55,726. And did they build their own houses?—Yes.

55,727. Without any assistance?—Well, some of them got rough timber from the laird.

55,728. Was that all the assistance they got?—It was.

55,729. Was it in the wood they got the timber?—In the wood.

55,730. They just got leave to cut down timber?—They had to cut it themselves and get it carted.

55,731. And they had the houses to erect?—Yes.

55,732. Some of them had also the land to reclaim afterwards from the heather?—Yes.

55,733. I see that you got considerable reductions of rent when the Crofters Commission went round there. Was that rent which was reduced by the Commission put upon the labour of the people themselves after they made the heather into arable?—All that was translated to the Crofters Commission.

55,734. You are talking of people who were put down upon a barren heath, without any houses, without any arable land, who got no assistance except the rough timber growing in the wood, yet they built houses themselves and reclaimed land and paid rent?—Yes.

55,735. And I find that when the Crofters Commission went round they reduced that rent considerably?—But those who lived in both ends of the township did not apply to the Commission.

55,736. I observe that only 14 applied to the Commission?—Yes. There are some who come in at both ends of the township, to cultivate this land which was all heather, and these did not apply to the Commission.

55,737. Why did they not apply to the Commission?—Their rent was not so large as ours.

55,738. Was your father there before you?—My father was in Mungasdale, and he was in Badluachrach at the time of the Commission's visit.

55,739. He was sent to Badluachrach?—Yes.

55,740. What sort of land did he get when he went to Badluachrach?—He had a ninth share of the place, and he could cultivate the best in the town, as it was not divided into crofts as it is at present. They had a piece about, the nine of them, and they had both ends as pasture for their cattle.

55,741. You have your hill grazing separate from the people of Doire-nam-Muc?—Yes.

55,742. Is there a fence between you?—Not a fence, but we know the marches.

55,743. You know the marches and you can keep them?—Yes.

55,744. And if your stock trespasses on their grazing, their stock trespasses on yours, I suppose?—Yes.

55,745. You do not find any need for fencing?—No, I think not.

55,746. Why do they put fences between the deer forests and the crofters' land?—That is to keep the sheep out of the deer forest.

55,747. It is for the protection of the deer forest that fences are put up?—Yes, surely; it is not for the benefit of the crofters that that is done.

55,748. In your opinion then, supposing the people of these townships that you refer to got the land adjacent to them which is now deer forest, what would you propose should be done with the arable land that has been allowed to go out of cultivation round about the farm-house of Mungasdale? Would you use it as pasture, or would you propose that it should be ploughed up again?—Well, it would give a better crop than what we are using just now; it ought to be cultivated, undoubtedly.

55,749. Would it help to relieve the crowding that at present exists in your township?—Yes.

55,750. Have they all got some stock in your township?—Yes, a few; some have thirty sheep, others again as few as six.

55,751. Are there any who have no sheep?—Some have only one sheep.

55,752. Is Gruinard Island a good subject for peopling, do you think?—There were six crofters in it in former times.

55,753. And you state now that you get your horses grazed there from the tenant of the shooting?—Yes, Mr Baring.

55,754. And you pay £1 each. For how long do you get that grazing?—Till Martinmas.

55,755. From when?—From 26th May.

55,756. That is practically half a year?—Yes.

55,757. How many of you send horses there?—Six from Badluachrach and two from Doire-nam-Muc.

55,758. That is at the rate of £16 a year for the island?—The other half-year, I don't know what would be on it.

55,759. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I want to understand how the grazing is held now between your township and the others. Do the three townships graze in common, or is there a march between you and Doire-nam-Muc?—Yes, there is a march, but there is not a fence, and the sheep can go back and fore. Most of the Doire-nam-Muc sheep stay on their own side, except a few that cross the march. Doire-nam-Muc is between us and Badcall.

Ullapool.

Alexander Mackenzie.

55,760. Did the last witness speak truly when he said that half your stock of sheep died every year?—I cannot say; maybe half of his died. There are a good many deaths in the winter. Last year it was pretty wet and stormy, but perhaps other years may not be so bad.

55,761. Perhaps he was only referring to last year?—Very likely.

55,762. Is it more important for you to get more summer grazing, or better wintering ground?—We require both.

55,763. Which is the more important of the two?—What is the good of summering when we have not the wintering.

55,764. Do you send any of your sheep away to wintering?—No.

55,765. Has there been much sub-division of crofts in your township?—I told already the number of crofts; 33 crofts and 25 crofters.

55,766. But I want to know whether that has arisen partly from sons getting parts of their father's crofts, or has been solely from new crofters coming in from Mungasdale?—It was divided into 33 crofts, 44 years ago.

55,767. And there has been no increase since?—No.

55,768. Then, there has been no sub-division since 1850. Can you specify any land upon which crofters could be placed on the Dundonnell estate to relieve Badluachrach?—There were some crofters throughout the low ground, about Dundonnell, about these fields that you saw. They were there in former times, at the same time as in Mungasdale.

55,769. But most of that land is now under crop?—Under crop in the landlord's hands.

55,770. But it is cultivated?—Part of it is cultivated and part not.

55,771. I saw a good many fields of corn, and large turnip fields there?—Yes, but you also saw a good many fields of pasture uncultivated.

55,772. Some of that was in rotation, was it not?—Well, there were crofters on the other side of the river as you pass up near Braigh where there is an old woman's house, but it is nearly heather now.

55,773. But most of the strath about Dundonnell house is in rotation, is it not,—most of the best land?—Yes, the best land.

55,774. And the terms of our remit prevent us from dealing with or making recommendations with regard to land under crop; are you aware of that?—I would leave it to yourselves.

55,775. But it is not a matter that is left to our discretion; it is laid down for us that we have only to take into consideration land which is at present under deer or under sheep?—Well, we do not want any land that is under crop at present.

55,776. Then, can you specify any land that is not under crop which could be formed into new holdings?—The only land I want is the land of Mungasdale, the land of my forefathers, where my father and my grandfather were born and bred, and my great-grandfather paid rent to old Davidson of Tulloch.

55,777. If you got the lands of Mungasdale farm as an extension of grazing, would that satisfy your wish?—Yes.

55,778. About the deer fence,—is not a deer fence a benefit to crofters in keeping the deer from the crofters' crops?—Not a bit; we would rather have the sheep among the deer even with the deer among the sheep.

55,779. So you have not a great opinion of your crops?—No.

55,780. Does that arise from the soil, or the climate, or why are your crops so poor that you would not mind seeing them destroyed by the deer?—They very seldom come to us. We are at the outmost point of Dundonnell at the seaside, but the deer only want a secret place.

55,781. Then, as to Gruinard Island, do you consider an island a suitable place to send families to live on?—Yes, but we would rather get it as grazing for the township if we could not get Mungasdale.

55,782. I would certainly agree with you that an island is better for grazing than for habitation, because of the difficulties of sending children to school?—Yes.

55,783. Or getting a doctor in case of illness?—Yes, that is very true.

55,784. The Chairman.—Is your own croft a half croft or a whole one?—It is a whole croft.

55,785. But some of the others, I suppose, are only parts of what were formerly crofts?—The whole of them were made the same size, but there is not so much arable land in one as in another.

55,786. Then, when these people came from Mungasdale, were the original nine crofts cut up into separate holdings?—There were only nine before, but they were not made into crofts at that time; they had just piece about of the township; and now when the crofters came from Mungasdale it was divided into 33 crofts, with the same area in each croft, but the centre of the township was best; there was more cultivated land there, and those that came from Mungasdale picked up the end.

55,787. Were there 33 separate houses erected?—Yes.

55,788. And now there are 25?—Yes.

55,789. Has each crofter his own land now?—Yes.

55,790. Formerly the land was held in runrig?—Yes.

55,791. When the crofters came in from Mungasdale, did they each get a portion of the land, or did they cultivate the land in common with those who had been there before?—They got just a croft on those outskirts of the township.

55,792. On the pasture?—Yes, and those who were in first got the first chance of the centre of the township.

55,793. Did those who got crofts on the outskirts get pieces of land to themselves belonging to their dwelling-houses?—Yes.

55,794. Is that what happened, or are you not sure?—I am sure they got the crofts when it was divided; they got a croft the same as the rest though there might not be so much arable land in it.

55,795. What stock have you at present — how many cattle?—I have got four cows and twenty sheep and one horse.

55,796. And you have also followers, I suppose?—Yes, I have one stirk and two calves.

55,797. What loss, if any, did you sustain in sheep last winter?—I had fourteen hoggs and I only clipped four of them.

55,798. Were the rest lost?—Yes.

55,799. From the severe weather of last winter?—Yes.

55,800. May we take that as indicative of the loss among the other crofters in the township; did they lose similarly?—Yes, pretty nearly the same average.

55,801. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Has there been much improvement in the houses in your township since the crofters got the security of the Crofters Act? Have they improved their houses or built any new houses?—We built a new house.

55,802. Is it an entirely new house?—Yes.

55,803. And have others built new houses?—A few of them in Badluachrach.

55,804. Have they generally improved their houses since then? Are they better now than they were at the passing of the Act?—Yes, inside, but there are no new slated houses built; they are under turf and thatch, the same as in the olden times as yet.

55,805. But is your new house a slated house?—No, it has a zinc roof.

55,806. Would you propose to transfer some of the crofters to the arable land of Mungasdale, seeing that they are so congested there? Is it your idea that some of them should be planted in the old arable ground at Mungasdale?—Yes, it is a pity to see that good land under rabbits.

55,807. You say ten crofters had Mungasdale before?—Yes.

55,808. Had these ten the whole of Mungasdale farm?—Well, they had very nearly all except one man they called Coinneach who had a small patch on the south side of it.

Ullapool. — Alexander Mackenzie.

55,809. But was there not a large grazing of Mungasdale?—Yes.

55,810. Who had the extensive grazing of Mungasdale? Had the crofters it?—Of course, they had it in former times, except the small patch that this man had. It was not a sheep farm then, and there were no slated houses, nor anything at that time.

55,811. Can you tell us the extent of land that these men had, the ten crofters? How much grazing had they?—I cannot tell that as it was not in my time, but I know some of them went as far as Loch-na-Sealg.

55,812. You think that all the old grazings and arable land could now be profitably occupied by crofters?—All that is on this side of Loch-na-Cairill, on this side of the fence.

55,813. Is there no land on the other side, beside the Gruinard river?—Not fit for cultivation.

55,814. But for grazing?—Yes, fit for grazing.

55,815. Is it good grazing land all along the Gruinard river?—Very good.

55,816. When you speak of this particular land you refer to the want of your own township?—Yes.

55,817. But you think that the rest of the ground round the Gruinard river might be profitably occupied by some others?—Well, I don't know: I only speak for myself.

55,818. You refer only to the wants of your own township?—Yes.

55,819. But the ground beside and along the Gruinard river is good grazing ground,—you know the ground, do you not?—Yes, good grazing all along to Kinlochewe from the seaside.

55,820. Is there a deer fence between your sheep and the deer forest?—No.

55,821. Not a sheep fence?—No, there is no fence between Badluacrach and the forest.

55,822. Are you going to point out to us any other land on the Dundonnell estate, or do you know any other land that might be profitably occupied by crofters?—No.

55,823. Do you know Kildonan?—I know it, and I have heard about it.

55,824. Were there crofts on Kildonan?—Yes, there were.

55,825. What is your opinion regarding the land there?—I do not know what condition they were in there; it was not in my time.

55,826. You do not give any opinion at all about it?—No.

55,827. Have you any idea how long it is since that place was cleared?—No, I cannot tell you about that.

55,828. Was Strathbeg occupied by crofters before?—Oh, yes, the crofters were scattered from there.

55,829. By whom was the land there brought under cultivation?—It was the late Hugh Mackenzie that cleared the crofters out of it.

55,830. When was that?—I cannot say what year.

55,831. Mr Gordon.—How are you occupied at present when you are not working on your croft?—I am a gillie at Mr Wythers, Dundonnell.

55,832. How are the crofters in your township usually occupied,—do they go to the fishing?—Most of them do, and to the Fort-William railway; they are scattered anywhere they can earn a living. There is not much work in this neighbourhood.

55,833. What sort of crofts would you suggest being made at Mungasdale, would they be small crofts something like what you have?—That would be rather small: I think four crofters would do in Mungasdale if they got it at a fair rent.

55,834. Could four crofters live at Mungasdale if they got it at a fair rent, without going to the railway or to the fishing?—I think so, if they got the old boundaries of Mungasdale pasture.

55,835. Which you have described?—Yes.

55,836. What would your township do if you got that?—The four of them who would come out would do some good to the township.

55,837. But would you propose to share the pasture with the Mungasdale tenants?—We would take Mungasdale as a pasture if you could manage to give us it in that way.

Ullapool. — Alexander Mackenzie.

55,838. I want to know what you would suggest yourself. You said you thought the tenants should be removed from Badluachrach and placed on the arable land of Mungasdale, is that so?—Yes, that would do.

55,839. Then, would you suggest that the pasture should be held in common by the two townships within the boundaries which you have described; is that what you mean?—Mungasdale must have boundaries of its own when the crofters go there, and every township must keep to its own bounds.

55,840. You prefer that each township should have its own pasture set aside for itself?—Yes.

55,841. How many crofters would have to be removed from your township before the crofts would be of the size you would suggest?—Before it would be as good as it was in the old times it ought to be left at nine.

55,842. But if you only took four out of 33 you would leave 29?—Well, if they got Gruinard island as well for grazing, that would improve them.

55,843. But you would still have small crofts there?—But we would be better than we are at present.

55,844. But after all, you would be obliged to depend more upon the wages earned for labour than the produce of your crofts?—We could not help that; we must do the best we can.

55,845. How many men in your township are employed as gillies besides yourself?—There are only two from Badluachrach, myself and another.

55,846. And how many township men would be employed in the neighbourhood?—There are only six gillies altogether.

55,847. But is there no other work?—There are a few working in the river for the laird,—six or seven people.

55,848. Is there any local fishing with you at all?—No, without the railway there is no chance to send the fish to market.

55,849. Is there any harbour near your township that could be utilised in the event of a railway coming near?—No harbour, or pier, or road, or anything. We have to carry everything on our backs like the very slaves. We have no roads except a footpath which was made last year, and that is of no use to us with a cart.

55,850. But suppose the railway came, would your township take to fishing naturally?—Yes.

55,851. Is there any place where you could land your boats at home?—We could run to Ullapool, past Cailleach Point any day, with whatever fish we might have.

55,852. You think the fishing industry would be stimulated if you got a railway to Ullapool?—No mistake about that.

55,853. Would you suggest that as a better means of supplying a livelihood to the crofters upon Lochbroom than additional land?—They would require both of them to make a good living.

55,854. But some of them might naturally take to fishing, and that would leave more room for the others?—Yes, that is so.

55,855. Then, in the event of a railway coming here, would you suggest provision being made for fishing crofts as well as for self-supporting crofts?—Yes.

55,856. The Chairman.—Is there any idea in your township of new holdings of a self-sustaining kind by which the crofter could live, or is the view of the township confined to holdings whereby they lived partly and supplemented what they got from their crofts by outside labour?—They have a notion of holdings by which they could live entirely.

55,857. Holdings large enough and with sufficient grazing to enable them to live exclusively by the holding?—Yes.

55,858. Without resorting to either fishing or labour?—Yes.

55,859. There is a desire in that direction? Or do you think that has been considered among you?—Yes, it has been considered among us that we would rather have land that would keep us going without having to go to fishing or labour,—that the farm should keep the family going.

Ullapool. Alexander Mackenzie.

55,860. Mr Sutherland.—You stated in reply to a question that was put to you, that if you put four new tenants into Mungasdale that would not practically relieve the congestion that at present exists in your township,—four would not be a very great relief to you, would it?—I meant that it would be enough for four to make a living by. If you put more in Mungasdale they could not make a living; they would have to get outside work.

55,861. But don't you know any other lands in this neighbourhood that are at present occupied as deer forests, or sheep farms, which are as good at Badluachrach was when the people went there first?—I don't know; I only just want the land of my forefathers.

55,862. But you are not speaking for yourself?—I am speaking for the township.

55,863. And what does the township think? Are there not good lands up Strathbeg and Strathmore?—I am sure there are.

55,864. Better than Badluachrach?—Better than Badluachrach, of course; but if you put too many in any place it will spoil it.

55,865. There are not too many people in Strathbeg and Strathmore at present?—No.

55,866. They are not congested, are they?—No.

55,867. And you think there is good grazing there?—Yes.

55,868. And land that could be easily made into arable land?—Yes.

55,869. Mr Aitken, of Messrs Purves & Aitken, W.S., Edinburgh, Agents for Dundonnell Estate.—I think the witness might have an opportunity of correcting a statement he made about the fence between the pasture of Doire-nam-Muc and Gruinard. There are only a few hundred yards at the end of Loch-na-Cairill fenced, the rest of the march is quite unfenced?—That was a mistake.

55,870. Then I think Mr Maccallum brought out that some of the arable land presently in the little Strath was brought into cultivation by crofters at one time: was there any of the arable land at present in the hands of the laird that was ever brought into cultivation by the crofters?—I cannot tell you exactly about that.

55,871. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Is the whole of the land in Strathbeg in the occupation of the proprietor?—[Mr Aitken.—That is so.]

enneth ackenzie.

KENNETH MACKENZIE, Crofter, Badluachrach (45)—examined.

55,872. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

55,873. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

55,874. Your holding seems to have 9 acres arable; and 4 acres outrun; with a share of 1321 acres of common pasture. Do you appear as a delegate elected at a meeting?—Yes.

55,875. Were you appointed at the same meeting as the previous witness, Alexander Mackenzie?—Yes.

55,876. And you are to represent the same views?—Yes.

55,877. Does his evidence fully set forth what you wish to say?—Yes.

55,878. Then, we may take you as concurring in his evidence?—Yes.

55,879. Have you anything further to add?—No.

55,880. What is your occupation? Have you any other means of livelihood besides carrying on the croft?—I am a merchant; I sell groceries.

55,881. How long have you been a merchant?—Nineteen years.

hn aclean.

JOHN MACLEAN, Crofter, Badluachrach (70)—examined.

55,882. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

55,883. Your holding has 6 acres 3 roods 11 poles arable; and 4 acres 21 poles outrun; with a share in the common pasture of 1321 acres; the old rent was £6, 10s.; and the new rent is £4, 14s.? Were you appointed at the same time as Alexander Mackenzie?—Yes. Ullapool. John Maclean.

55,884. To come here and tell us about that grazing?—Yes.

55,885. And you confirm what he said, I suppose?—Yes.

55,886. Have you anything additional to tell us, or did his evidence, which was taken at great length, cover all the points?—He said everything, and it was very well said.

JOHN MACKENZIE, Crofter, Badluachrach (69)—examined. John Mackenzie.

55,887. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter at Badluachrach?—Yes.

55,888. Your holding has 4 acres 1 rood arable; 3 roods 18 poles outrun; and a share in the common pasture of 1321 acres; the old rent was £5; and the new rent is £3, 8s. Were you appointed at the same meeting as Alexander Mackenzie?—Yes. I agree with what he said, and have nothing to add.

55,889. He stated the case for the township pretty fully?—I think he did.

55,890. And you agree with his views?—Yes.

55,891. Mr Sutherland.—Were you born in Badluachrach?—Yes, and my father before me.

55,892. Was your father one of the original nine who were there?—Yes. I was in it myself at that time.

55,893. Do you know any other place except the farm of Mungasdale that is suitable for making new holdings in?—No.

55,894. You do not wish to speak of any other place than that?—No.

ALEXANDER MACKENZIE, Fisherman, Badluachrach (41)—examined. Alexander Mackenzie.

55,895. The Chairman.—Do you concur in the evidence that we have had already?—Yes.

55,896. What is your occupation?—I am a fisherman.

55,897. A crofter and fisherman?—Yes: I just cultivate part of the croft that my father and my forefathers had.

55,898. Do you live on your father's holding?—Yes, my father is an old man now, upwards of 80 years of age, and unable to work.

55,899. Are you married?—Yes.

55,900. Have you a separate fire?—No.

55,901. You live in the house with your father?—Yes.

DONALD MACIVER, Crofter, Doire-nam-Muc (63). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.) Donald Maciver.

55,902. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

55,903. Your holding has 2 acres 2 roods 15 poles arable; 18 poles outrun, and a share in the common pasture of 1211 acres; the old rent was £3, 7s.; and the new rent is £2, 6s. Were you appointed at the same meeting as Hector Mackenzie to give evidence about additional grazing?—Yes.

55,904. And do you agree with the evidence he gave?—I do.

55,905. Have you anything further to say, or did he state the views of the township pretty well?—I wish to add that if I am to get any land, it is from Mungasdale I expect to get it.

55,906. The only land you ask our attention to is on the farm of Mungasdale?—Yes.

55,907. Is that land for new holdings that you have in your mind, or for grazing, or for both?—We would take it for both.

55,908. And is the land suitable for both?—Yes.

Ullapool. Donald Maciver.

My father and my grandfather and myself were all born in Mungasdale.

55,909. It is a very old township?—Yes.

55,910. Is the land you are thinking of land that is under grass at present, or land under crop?—It is all under grass just now.

Murdo Macgregor.

MURDO MACGREGOR, Crofter, Doire-nam-Muc (65)—examined.

55,911. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter at Doire-nam-Muc?—Yes.

55,912. Your holding seems to extend to 3 acres 3 roods arable; 3 roods 10 poles outrun; and a share in the common pasture of 1211 acres; the old rent was £8, 17s. 2d.; and the new rent is £5, 3s. Were you appointed at the same meeting as Hector Mackenzie?—Yes, the same meeting.

55,913. And you wish to give us the same views about land?—I don't know anything about Mungasdale.

55,914. What is it you are here to tell us about?—Just to say what Alexander Mackenzie said.

55,915. Alexander Mackenzie told us about additional grazing, and do you agree with his statement?—Yes.

55,916. Are you a fisherman?—I was a fisherman and crofter.

55,917. But perhaps you are too old now to go to the fishing?—Yes.

55,918. Have you a son that goes to the fishing?—Yes.

55,919. Does he live with you?—No.

55,920. Where does he live?—He lives at Lochcarron.

55,921. How do you make a living?—I have another son who lives with me.

55,922. And he carries on the croft, and goes to the fishing?—Yes.

55,923. What is his name?—Alexander Macgregor.

Kenneth Mackenzie.

KENNETH MACKENZIE, Crofter, Badcall (40)—examined.

55,924. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

55,925. Your croft appears to have 2 acres 3 roods 35 poles arable; and 1 acre 30 poles outrun; with a share of 877 acres of common pasture; the old rent was £5, 3s. 2d.; and the new rent is £3, 10s. Did you attend a meeting in view of the sitting of this Commission?—Yes.

55,926. Were you there appointed a delegate?—No.

55,927. Are you here then as an individual?—Yes.

55,928. What is it you wish to tell us?—That I want to get more land.

55,929. You have a grazing of 877 acres,—is it too small?—Yes.

55,930. The land that would suffice for grazing was formerly part of the farm of Mungasdale, was it?—No, the deer forest of Gruinard.

55,931. Is it now part of the deer forest of Gruinard?—Yes.

55,932. How long have you been living at Badcall?—Nineteen years.

55,933. Do you agree with the evidence we have had to-day with regard to the forest of Gruinard; or does it come to this that you are here to-day as an individual asking us to consider as to additional grazing for your croft from the forest of Gruinard?—Yes, for the Badcall township.

55,934. Are you speaking for yourself, or for the township?—I am speaking for myself.

55,935. Not for the township?—No; there are some of them here.

55,936. Were you appointed to speak for the township, or are you only speaking for yourself?—I am speaking for myself.

55,937. And you wish us to consider as to land that is now in the forest of Gruinard?—Yes.

55,938. What stock have you at present?—I have 42 sheep. Ullapool. Kenneth Mackenzie.

55,939. How many cows?—Three cows.

55,940. Have you any stirks?—Two stirks, 42 ewes, and wedders and hoggs.

55,941. Have you a horse?—No.

55,942. And you say the grazing you have is too limited for the stock you have?—Yes.

55,943. And you wish additional grazing?—Yes.

55,944. Would you be able to put additional stock on the new grazing?—Yes.

55,945. Are you a fisherman as well as a crofter?—Yes.

55,946. Do you go to the herring fishing?—Yes.

55,947. Have you a share of a boat, or do you go as a hired hand?—I go as a hired hand.

55,948. To the east coast fishing?—Yes.

55,949. Have you been to the east coast this year?—Yes.

55,950. And had a good season?—Yes, but a poor fishing.

55,951. What do you mean by a good season but a poor fishing?—I mean we had good weather.

55,952. Mr Sutherland.—How many tenants are in the township of Badcall?—Ten; there are eight shares.

55,953. How many sheep have they got among them?—I do not know.

55,954. If each of the 10 had 42 as you have, that would make 420?—There are not the half of that.

55,955. That would be a heavy stock upon 877 acres. Where do you say that you would like your holding enlarged from; is it from the old Mungasdale farm?—From the deer forest.

55,956. Does your township adjoin the old farm of Mungasdale?—No.

55,957. You adjoin what is called Dundonnell, do you?—We adjoin the deer forest of Gruinard.

55,958. And is there land there suitable for enlarging your holding?—There is good pasture there.

55,959. Is there good pasture all over the forest?—Yes.

55,960. Is it as good as the pasture you have now?—Yes, and far better.

55,961. All over?—Yes.

55,962. So that if it is suitable for grazing on this particular part, it would be suitable all over the forest?—Yes.

55,963. Mr Gordon.—What part of the forest of Gruinard do you think would be suitable; is it the part adjoining your present grazing?—Yes.

55,964. You march on the east side with the small township of Badbea?—Yes.

55,965. And does your pasture, at present, go as far up as the summit of Sail-Bheag?—Yes.

55,966. Does the Badbea pasture meet you at the top of the hill there?—No.

55,967. Is the Badbea march with you the old parish march, or the old county march?—The county march.

55,968. How many crofters are there in Badbea?—Two.

55,969. With whom do they march?—With Ardessie.

55,970. Badbea marches with you on the one side and with Ardessie on the other?—Yes.

55,971. Would the pasture of the lands of Ardessie not be more convenient for you than the forest, for an extension of grazing?—No.

55,972. Why not?—It is not in the bounds, except a small part.

55,973. But supposing that the township of Badcall and the township of Badbea were to have common pasture, which would include the present pasture of the farm of Ardessie, would that meet your views?—I do not follow you.

55,974. How much additional grazing would you require?—We were speaking about 1½ miles square.

55,975. Well, the farm of Ardessie is much larger than that. If there are only eight crofts in your township and two at Badbea, that would not be too many people to share in the common grazing, would it?—I do not understand. (Question put in Gaelic)?—It would not meet our demands; there is little enough for Badbea as they are already.

55,976. But if they got the farm of Ardessie added. Is the farm of Ardessie as good pasture as the portion of the forest to which you refer?—No, it is not such good land.

55,977. What part do you refer to?—Down from Sail-Mhor to Lochan-Gaineamhaich, a straight line.

55,978. Down to the Gruinard river?—No, not that way at all.

55,979. Would you cross the top of Carn-na-Beiste?—Not quite that length.

55,980. What would be the southern boundary?—A loch on this side of that Cairn.

55,981. You would want to go from Lochan-Gaineamhaich along the stream Allt Craigour?—Yes.

55,982. And up to the top of Carn-na-Beiste?—We don't want to go that length.

55,983. Where would you get a good boundary otherwise?—There is a burn coming up from Craigour.

55,984. But where would the west boundary of the ground you are speaking of be?—The burn comes up to the fence.

55,985. Suppose you got this additional land, how would you propose to stock it?—We would put stock on it as we could, and it would do good to the stock we have at present.

55,986. But would you propose to work it as a club stock?—No.

55,987. You have 42 sheep yourself, but you say others have not half that number?—That is so; some have not near that number.

55,988. Are you aware that under a club stock each man would be restricted to his own number of sheep, so that one man would not be able to take advantage of the poorer crofters?—Each would put an equal number on.

55,989. Do you understand what a stock club means?—Yes.

55,990. But you would not approve of a stock club?—I don't know; there are others here.

55,991. How would you regulate the stock on the ground? How would you suggest that it should be regulated otherwise than as a club stock?—I think the most of them are fit to stock the land already.

55,992. But is it not a fact that at present they have too many stock on the ground?—They are overstocked already.

55,993. How would you propose to prevent overstocking in the future?—I don't know.

55,994. The Chairman.—Do you keep more sheep at present than you ought to keep?—Yes.

55,995. What is the number you are entitled to keep? [Mr Aitken.—Sixteen].

55,996. Are you entitled to keep 16?—Yes.

55,997. How many ewes have you got at present?—Sixteen ewes, with lambs.

55,998. What else have you got?—Twenty-six other sheep.

55,999. You are keeping at present an over-stock?—Yes.

56,000. Why is that? You are aware that an overstock is injurious to your neighbours, because your sheep eat grass to which you have no right?—Yes.

56,001. Well, kindly explain to us why you keep an over-stock; is it because you just find that they do not prevent you?—I am trying to take my living out of the stock.

56,002. At the expense of your neighbours?—A number of the crofters in the township have the souming.

56,003. But you have more?—Yes.

56,004. Well, why do you keep more than the souming?—I cannot tell.

56,005. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Did I understand you to say that if you got an extension of grazing you do not know how the stock could be regulated in the future?—I said so.

56,006. Do you think it is reasonable to ask us to recommend an extension of grazing for a township if the new grazing is liable to be over-stocked in the same way as the old?—We would put an equal number of sheep on the new grazing.

56,007. But you ought to put an equal number of sheep on the present grazing, ought you not?—By rights we should.

56,008. Do you pay a bigger rent for keeping a larger sheep stock than your neighbours?—I am not paying a bigger rent.

56,009. Then, you can give us no guarantee that if we recommended extension of grazing, the proper limit would be better respected in the future than it is now?—We will guarantee that. Any crofter who had an overstock in the new grazing would have to pay for the overstock to the man who had less.

56,010. The Chairman.—Do you pay anything at present to your neighbours for your over-stock?—I pay nothing.

56,011. Is it because you have an over-stock that you wish an extension of grazing?—Without a doubt.

56,012. Suppose you and the others in the township kept to your proper souming, would the grazing you have suffice?—No, there is not sufficient land for the souming.

56,013. Mr Sutherland.—Were there any estate rules regulating the amount of stock crofters could keep in your township?—There was no souming made in the township since I came to it.

56,014. Did the estate ever put such regulations into force if they existed?—I do not remember.

56,015. You never saw it done?—I did not see a souming in the township I am in since I came to it.

56,016. Do you know that an Act of Parliament exists for regulating grazing stock?—No, I am not aware.

56,017. And do you know that if he is not satisfied with the way in which the stock is managed, the landlord can put that Act into operation?—I know that the proprietor could make a souming.

56,018. But you do not know of the existence of the Act of Parliament?—I don't know about the Act of Parliament.

56,019. If there is such an Act of Parliament, do you think it would be a sufficient guarantee that there would be no over-stocking?—It would be a guarantee.

56,020. There would be no difficulty as to new stock for you if you got a new holding?—The bit of land we have would require very little more stock than we have at present.

56,021. If you got an extension of holding such as you want, you would have no difficulty in stocking it?—No difficulty.

56,022. Is it land your township wants, and not stock?—Land first.

56,023. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—By keeping 42 sheep do you break any of the estate regulations, or any order of the Crofters Commission?—Very little souming is done on the estate at all, on our side.

56,024. But are you aware that 16 sheep is the number that you are entitled to keep?—I do not know, five sheep for each £1 of rent.

56,025. Then, according to that, you would be entitled on your old rent to keep 25 sheep?—Yes.

56,026. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Then according to the present stock of sheep you have now, you ought to be paying £8 of rent?—That is so.

56,027. Instead of £3, 10s., which you pay at present?—£3, 10s.

56,028. The Chairman.—Do you think it is right or wrong to keep the number of sheep you have at present?—I believe it is wrong.

56,029. Mr Sutherland.—Did any one ask you for rent for the extra stock of sheep you keep at the present time?—No.

56,030. Mr Aitken, of Messrs Purves & Aitken, W.S., Edinburgh, Agents for the Proprietor.—Is it not the case that before the rent was reduced the souming in Badcall was four sheep for each £1 of rent?—When I came to the township they told me that it was five sheep to each £1 of rent.

56,031. Is it not the case that before the Crofters Commission came to Badcall you and the other members of the township stated that the souming was four sheep for each £1 of rent?—That is correct.

Ullapool. Kenneth Mackenzie.

56,032. Is it not also the case that you said to me at the rent collection on more than one occasion that now that the rent was reduced you were not aware whether the souming was changed or whether it was the old souming that was to be kept?—I have no recollection of that.

56,033. Is it not the case that I told you that the rent fixed by the Commissioners did not change the old souming at Badcall?—I do not remember.

Donald Mackenzie.

DONALD MACKENZIE, Crofter's son, Badcall (29). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

56,034. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—My mother is the crofter, widow Donald Mackenzie is her name.

56,035. The area of the croft is 2 acres 2 roods 7 poles arable; 1 acre and 1 pole outrun; and a share in 877 acres of common pasture; the old rent was £2, 0s. 6d., and the fair rent is £1, 16s. Are you here as a delegate, or as an individual?—I appear here with my neighbours asking more land.

56,036. Have your neighbours already stated fully enough what you wish to say?—My neighbour has said what I would say.

56,037. Have you anything additional to say?—No, I have nothing to add.

Duncan Campbell.

DUNCAN CAMPBELL, Crofter and Fisherman, Ardcharnich (57)—examined.

56,038. The Chairman.—Which estate are you upon?—The Coul estate.

56,039. That is Sir Arthur Mackenzie's?—Yes.

56,040. Are you a crofter?—Yes.

56,041. Your holding has 3 acres 1 rood 3 poles arable; 1 rood 6 poles outrun; and a share in 500 acres divided into ten shares; old rent £6, 11s. 9d.; new rent £3, 12s. Are you appearing for yourself, or were you appointed at a meeting?—There was a meeting at which I was appointed.

56,042. Along with Donald Ross?—Yes, and Alexander Munro.

56,043. What is it you wish to say?—I wish to let you know that there is land on the estate where I live now under sheep and deer, which was formerly occupied by our forefathers. In the place where we live, Ardcharnich, we have only about the half of Ardcharnich. We do not go to the march of Ardcharnich since a sort of eviction took place about 73 years ago. Then we were put to this grazing of Ardcharnich, and we want to get back to the old march.

56,044. What is the name of the forest?—Dauchary, Glenbeg Forest.

56,045. That is the forest of Inverlael and Glenbeg?—Yes.

56,046. The township you come from, you say, formerly had grazing which is now included in the forest?—Yes.

56,047. And you wish that grazing restored?—Not so much the grazing in the forest, as it is too high. The small portion we have is a small line going from the shore up some miles to the hill, and we do not get the use of it in winter time by reason of the snow. We want to get to the old march.

56,048. Which was a sheep farm?—Yes, adjoining the sheep farm, a good many years ago.

56,049. What sheep farm is that?—Inverlael.

56,050. That is Mr Walter Mundell's farm?—Yes.

56,051. Part of the grazing on his farm was formerly crofter land?—Yes.

56,052. If we could trace that march upon the map it would be an advantage?—It commenced at a place called Ardnalael, at the public road, and it goes up through the hill in a line to a loch called Loch-a'-Chreagain.

56,053. Is that the south march?—Yes, the south march: the north march is adjoining Mr Pirie's place. Ullapool. Duncan Campbell.

56,054. Is there a point there called Rudha-Aird-an-Tuirc?—Yes, but we go on further to Ardnalael, the next point.

56,055. The point you mean is the one nearest Inverlael farm?—Yes.

56,056. And running in a line up to Loch-a'-Chreagain?—Yes.

56,057. And back along the burn to Ardcharnich township?—Yes.

56,058. There is a square block of land there?—Yes.

56,059. What the meeting desired you to represent is that you need an extension of grazings by getting that land?—Yes.

56,060. Is that all you wish to say?—Yes.

56,061. If you had that extension of grazings, would you be satisfied?—We think that would help us a good bit, at any rate. It would not be too much, but it would help us on.

56,062. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Could you explain to us the present march of your outrun of 500 acres?—It is bounded by Mr Pirie on the one side, and Mr Mundell took another fence since the Crofters Commission passed, on the south side,—not on the old march. Probably the new fence is not shown on the map.

56,063. It is a fence on the south side, running up to a small burn?—Yes.

56,064. Do you know the remains of an old tower near Leckmelm?—No.

56,065. Do you graze up to the Leckmelm estate?—Yes.

56,066. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Inverlael is a sheep farm at present, is it?—Yes.

56,067. Were there crofters there before it was a sheep farm?—Yes.

56,068. Can you tell us what number of crofters were on the farm?—I can tell you one thing that an old neighbour of mine told me not long ago, who died less than a year ago. He often told me that from that bridge at Inverlael he could count 37 or 38 houses when he was a young boy; that is between Sir John Fowler's march to the west and the road on this side of Inverlael to the east.

56,069. Are there remains of old buildings there?—Yes, the remains are quite visible to any one on the road.

56,070. Can you give any idea as to when they were cleared out of Inverlael?—I believe it is about 73 years ago; not less than that,—perhaps between that and 80 years ago.

56,071. And is the old arable land which they have under cultivation now?—Yes, some of it is cultivated by Mr Mundell, but what the crofters had between that and Ardcharnich has been under sheep for 70 or 80 years and is not fit to cultivate in a day. We would look for that if we could get to this place, Ardnalaoigh; we could cultivate some of it because it was cultivated, but in a space of 70 years you may take it that it has turned out wild, and it would work better for us as pasture. We are scarce of cultivated lands; our crofts are poor and in a bad place, and perhaps we could use some of it that way.

56,072. But in the remainder of the farm, is there much land that was formerly under cultivation that is now uncultivated?—Yes, a good deal about Inverlael was cultivated by the crofters and is not cultivated now.

56,073. Do you think it is a place where new holdings might be formed? You have spoken of a part of it for extension, but would the remainder be suitable for the formation of new holdings?—I suppose it would be suitable for cultivating, but we do not want to go that length to spoil another man's place. We do not want to go that length, you understand.

56,074. I quite understand that you do not ask for it; but you appear here to give evidence with regard to land in your neighbourhood, and I wish to ask you whether you think the land is suitable?—I think it is quite suitable for arable land; plenty land about Inverlael is quite suitable for arable land, with a little work.

56,075. And do you think that these crofts, supposing they were formed out of Inverlael, would be readily taken up by crofters in this locality? Are there people who are desirous of taking new holdings, people in congested districts for instance?—It is my opinion that there are.

56,076. Have you been speaking to people who gave that view to you?—Yes, I have often spoken to people who would say that would be the place for them, but their opinion was that they would not get it.

56,077. But that would be the place for them if they could get it?—Yes.

56,078. Mr Gordon.—The land that you pointed out to us as being suitable for an extension of your township grazing is at present part of the farm of Inverlael?—Yes.

56,079. Does your township march at present with the estate of Leckmelm?—Yes.

56,080. How is the land on that estate occupied?—It is occupied by the proprietor.

56,081. Do you know a place on that property called Allt-'Raon-a-chroisg?—Yes.

56,082. Are there any crofts on that part of the estate now?—No.

56,083. How is the land on that former croft now occupied? Is it in the hands of the proprietor?—Some of it is under plantation, and some cultivated by the proprietor.

56,084. Are there a number of crofters who have been cleared from that property lately?—Yes, but I don't think I have anything to do with that. It is true enough, but I don't want to enlarge on that subject. I think it is not my place to answer questions about that estate.

56,085. But you came here to give us information?—Yes, about the Coul estate.

56,086. You would rather not speak about the Leckmelm estate?—No, I would rather not have anything to do with it.

56,087. Is there any one from that quarter present who could give us information about it?—No, I don't think so.

56,088. Do you know about the property?—Yes, I do.

56,089. Well, is it a fact that a number of crofters were turned out of that place?—Yes.

56,090. How is the land which these crofters had now occupied?—By the proprietor.

56,091. Does he cultivate that land?—Yes, and parts are now planted.

56,092. And what has become of the crofters?—They are just in cottages that were built for them; and some of them left and went away.

56,093. Do they get work on the property?—Yes, but there are not many of them that can work; they are getting old.

56,094. How do they live?—They do the best they can.

56,095. Have they been pensioned by the proprietor?—I don't think they are pensioned.

56,096. They had formerly grazings, had they not, along with their crofts?—Yes.

56,097. How is the hill pasture now occupied which they then held?—By sheep or deer forests, and the sheep are now put away; it is not to be under sheep any more, I understand.

56,098. Does that hill pasture join your township grazings?—Yes.

56,099. Would it be suitable as an extension of grazings for you?—Of course it would; likely it would be good grazing for anyone.

56,100. It is good grazing land?—Good grazing land.

56,101. The Chairman.—You remember, I suppose, that what were called the Leckmelm evictions excited a good deal of public attention at the time?—Yes.

56,102. That is about 11 years ago, is it not?—Yes.

56,103. And has Mr Pirie built houses for the crofters who were removed from their holdings?—Yes.

56,104. The whole of them?—Not the whole of them: there are a few of them yet in the old houses.

56,105. Those that had to leave their houses got new houses built for them?—Yes.

56,106. And they got a good deal of work from Mr Pirie, I daresay, when the changes were going on?—Yes, they were getting labour.

56,107. On the estate?—Well, he has a number of families,—I cannot call them crofters but old people.

56,108. Now, as to Inverlael, is there any desire among those you represent to see that farm broken up?—Well, we want to this march of Ardcharnich, and at the same time we are of opinion that the Inverlael farm would be a good nice farm, after the tenants got to their old march.

56,109. You think that although the crofters got to their old march there would be still left a very good farm of Inverlael?—Yes, that is my opinion.

56,110. Is there any desire to go further into that farm than to the old march?—No, we do not want to interfere with the man there,—as the old word stands, live and let live. We do not want to put down our neighbour altogether, but we see plainly that the Inverlael farm is a good farm even should the Ardcharnich tenants get to their old march.

56,111. You would let the rest of the Inverlael farm remain as it is?—Yes.

56,112. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Do you think it is for the benefit of the district that the Inverlael farm should remain a large farm after you got what you want out of it; or do you think it would be better to have it formed into smaller holdings?—I cannot answer that question very well: the proprietor knows that. It is my opinion that the whole farm should and would pay the proprietor as well should it be under crofters from one end to the other. That is my opinion; but the proprietor may have another opinion.

56,113. What is your opinion regarding the need there is for the formation of small holdings in this district? Is there need for an opening for some of the crofters in the congested townships?—I think there is a need for it. There are plenty cottars, young strong men, that have no land at all, who would be willing to take new holdings which they could get at a reasonable rent and with fair play,—not with argument; we don't want any quarrelling or fighting.

56,114. So that looking to the interests of the districts generally, it is your view that the whole of the farm should be available for the formation of small holdings?—Yes, that is my view, and I know that if that had taken place 20 or 30 years ago Lochbroom would have been a different place to-day, because the young people have had to remove to other places, and do the best for themselves, leaving the old behind.

56,115. With regard to the crofters who lost their holdings at Leckmelm, some of them still remain on the estate in houses built for them by the proprietor. Have these got potato ground?—I suppose they have patches of potato ground, but I don't know how much, or what support it would give them. I know they have some.

56,116. Are they allowed to keep poultry?—I cannot say.

56,117. I suppose these people have not the same advantages that crofters have; they have not fixity of tenure, have they?—I am not sure: I cannot go into details on that question.

56,118. Are you aware whether the proprietor has given them fixity of tenure or not?—I cannot say.

56,119. And you do not know whether they have leases?—I know some of them are removed,—unless they be obedient servants they must be off. If they are disobedient they lose their place.

56,120. The Chairman.—Have you any occupation besides that of a crofter?—No, I just do what I can get to do.

56,121. You mean that you take labouring work when you can get it?—Yes.

56,122. You do not live entirely by your holding?—No, it would not keep me long alive.

56,123. You live partly by the holding, and partly by such labour as you can get?—Yes.

56,124. Do you get labour in the district?—Sometimes I do, and sometimes I labour a good deal on Mr Pirie's estate, and a good deal on Sir John Fowler's estate.

Ullapool. — Duncan Campbell.

56,125. And anywhere else in the locality?—Not to any extent.

56,126. When you do not get labour in the locality do you go further south?—Not now.

56,127. But you did?—Yes, I followed the fishing for a long time, but I gave that up, and I am not working at it now.

56,128. Mr W. J. Duncan, Solicitor, Dingwall, Agent for Coul Estate.—You also get work on the roads, do you not?—Yes.

56,129. You told us that you think the farm of Inverlael might be put all under crofters. Would these crofters be able to take the present sheep stock over at valuation?—I believe not.

56,130. There is a valuable sheep stock on the farm at present?—Yes.

56,131. And you think they could not take it over at valuation?—I believe not, on their own account.

56,132. There is also a large farmhouse and a large steading; what would become of these if the farm were given over to crofters?—I don't know what would become of them. I have given my own opinion.

56,133. Would not they be wasted?—I said if such a thing has taken place 30 or 40 years ago, my opinion is that Lochbroom would be in a better situation than it is: and I remain of that opinion. It is a pity that these holdings should stand in place of a human being, and prevent him from getting the use of the land.

56,134. But that is not an answer to my question; what is to become of the buildings? Would they not go to ruin?—Oh, very likely they would, unless a gentleman would keep them up for his house.

56,135. That is another matter. Are the lands at the Inverlael end of the farm not very subject to be flooded by the river, both the Lael and the Broom?—Yes, part of it.

56,136. And it costs a good deal of money to keep these banks in order?—Yes, but that could be done.

56,137. Now, with regard to this bit of Inverlael that you want yourself, would the township be prepared to take over the sheep stock on it at valuation?—Oh, no, they need not do that, in my opinion.

56,138. Could they do it?—I don't think they could; no, they could not do it.

56,139. And is that ground not the wintering ground for the sheep at that end of that farm?—Yes, it is.

56,140. The only wintering ground?—The only wintering ground, and that is the very reason I am wanting it for the wintering of the sheep, because I have no wintering place, and Inverlael has another good wintering place.

56,141. Then it would very seriously injure the farm if that bit of wintering ground was taken from it?—Yes, it would, but after all it would be a good farm.

56,142. Now you said that if you got this bit of additional ground it would satisfy you,—if you got the old march?—Yes, that is what I want.

56,143. Did not the township get a field of arable land added to it in 1890?—Yes.

56,144. And I think you then said, all of you, in writing, that you would be satisfied with that? [The Chairman.—Satisfied with that as in a question with the Crofters Commission; but not satisfied with that as in a question with the Royal Commission.]

56,145. There was a minute put in signed by you and all the other crofters to the following effect:—'Duncan for the landlord, Major W. G. Mundell the 'tenant of Inverlael farm, and the applicants for themselves, stated that the landlord had agreed that the 'applicants should have the ground known as the 'Ardcharnich farm lying to the west of the Ardcharnich 'burn, and extending to 10 acres or thereby, added to 'their holdings; that the applicants had unanimously 'agreed to and accepted of this as satisfying their 'applications, and that the application quoad ultra 'should be withdrawn and abandoned as the same is 'hereby withdrawn and abandoned.' That was then agreed to?—Yes, that was settled, but not for ever; just to look for more when we get a chance.

56,146. Then if you got the land up to the old march, it would only satisfy you for a few years?—Yes, for a few years, but it was just an acre each. That was not much of an addition.

Ullapool. — Duncan Campbell.

56,147. Now about the land at the Inverlael end of the farm, the low land there; I suppose that is the wintering land for that end of the farm?—Yes.

56,148. And without it that end of the farm would be useless, is not that your view?—Oh, yes, that is my view.

56,149. Mr Sutherland.—You stated in reply to a question by Mr Duncan that you worked on the road. What road do you work on?—I am working at days' wages.

56,150. Is it the public road?—On the public road.

56,151. You are in the employment of the County Council, in fact? It is not the estate that gives you that work?—The public.

56,152. You are the servant of the County Road Board, are you not?—No, I work there on days' wages with men whose employment is from the Road Trustees. They have too much to do, and they need a man to help them.

56,153. The ordinary public road?—Yes.

56,154. It is not a private road?—No.

56,155. You were asked the question what would become of the steadings if you got the land. Now, I think you said that all this land was in the occupation of small holders before it was made into a sheep farm?—Yes.

56,156. What became of their steadings when it was made into a sheep farm, do you know?—That is a plain question.

56,157. Can you give a plain answer to it? What became of them?—They came to ruin; the ruins show themselves there yet.

56,158. There was no word at that time about keeping up farm steadings, was there?—I do not know.

56,159. You never heard any solicitude on the point of factors to keep up steadings?—No.

56,160. You were asked about the extension you got previously, and the finality of that extension. A statement was read which showed distinctly that that satisfaction referred only to the application you were then making?—Yes.

56,161. And did not at all exclude you from making any other application if the opportunity arose?—That is what I was wanting to say.

56,162. But the paper itself bore that it referred to that Application for Enlargement to the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

56,163. How many families are in your township?—Nine.

56,164. Then you got an acre each of extension?—Yes.

56,165. It was also asked of you if it would not injure the farm of Inverlael if you got a portion of it. Would you not like to meet the factor or the landlord in that case by taking the whole farm?—I would not think of applying for the whole; it is too much for me.

56,166. But for others?—I know others would be glad to take it.

56,167. There would be no objection then if the whole farm were taken?—No; it would be no loss to the proprietor then.

56,168. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—I think you have distinctly stated that, in your opinion, there would be no loss to the proprietor supposing it were broken up?—Yes.

56,169. You are aware, no doubt, that there is a great difficulty in letting large farms?—In some cases.

56,170. Did you ever hear it given as a reason for turning land into forest, that they could not get a tenant for a sheep farm that had gone out of lease?—In some cases, and in some seasons; but in most cases they do get farmers.

56,171. Do you not hear of large farms being converted into forests, and the reason given being that they could not get a tenant for them as large farms?—Yes.

56,172. Did you hear of the same difficulty in letting small farms?—No, I never heard any difficulty in regard to that.

56,173. You said too that there is a very valuable stock upon the ground. Is that not evidence that it is suitable for occupation by crofters?—I think so.

56,174. You said there was a valuable stock upon the farm?—Yes, I said that.

56,175. Is that a pretty sure sign that it is suitable for small holdings?—Yes, it is a sure sign that the land is good.

56,176. And such as you would like to see in small holdings?—Yes.

56,177. I think you said too that the crofters would have some difficulty in taking over the stock at valuation. Did you ever hear of proprietors having a difficulty in taking over stock at valuation?—Not often.

56,178. You never heard them making a great complaint about the valuations being too high?—No.

56,179. Did you not hear of their being robbed by high valuations of stock,—by valuations being put upon stock far above the actual value, and the proprietors being ruined?—No, I cannot say that I did.

56,180. Did you ever hear of the valuations being too high?—Yes, often.

56,181. And the proprietors have suffered from that, have they not?—Yes.

56,182. You would not like the crofters to suffer from unjust valuations?—No.

56,183. It would not be fair?—No, it would not be fair.

56,184. The Chairman.—It is right to mention that although we have only heard of one or two farms, there are a good many others which have not been mentioned: on Coigach estate there are Badintarbart, Achnahaird, Inverpolly, North Keanachulish, Glastullich, Corrie, Langwell, Kenachruinn or Moorfield; on Coul estate, there is Inverlael farm; on Sir John Fowler's estate Lochybhraoin and Caillich grazing, and Achindrean; on Dundonnell estate, the farm of Newton of Loggie, and the farm of Kildonan; and there is the farm of Leckmelm, and the glebe of Lochbroom. We have heard of only two of these,—Inverlael and Leckmelm.

56,185. Mr Duncan.—Are you aware that the rent of Inverlael sheep farm is only £188?—No, I am not aware of that.

DONALD ROSS, Crofter and Labourer, Ardcharnich (43).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

56,186. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

56,187. The blue-book gives your holding as containing 1 acre 1 rood 31 poles arable; and 1 rood outrun; with a share in the common of 500 acres; old rent £4, 17s. 9d.; fair rent £2, 15s.; arrears £38, 19s. 9d., of which £33, 9s. 9d. were cancelled, and £5, 10s. ordered to be paid. That area does not include the enlargement. Were you appointed as a delegate along with Duncan Campbell?—I was asked to go with him.

56,188. Have you heard the evidence he gave?—Yes.

56,189. Do you agree with it?—I do.

56,190. Have you anything further to say?—No.

ALEXANDER MUNRO, Road Contractor, Ardcharnich (35)—examined.

56,191. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—I am a crofter, but I am here on behalf of my mother, who is a widow.

56,192. What is her name?—Mrs Murdo Munro.

56,193. I see the holding has 2 acres 2 roods 25 poles arable; and 36 poles outrun; with a share of 500 acres grazing divided into ten shares; the old rent was £6, 7s. 6d.; and the new rent is £3, 10s. Do you agree with the evidence given by Duncan Campbell?—Yes.

56,194. And have you anything to add to it?—No.

WILLIAM GUNN, Strathpeffer, Factor, Cromartie estates (54)—examined.

56,195. The Chairman.—Do you wish to make a statement, Mr Gunn?—No, I have no desire to make a statement, as the properties I am interested in here have not been referred to: but I should like to say a few words in reference to the Garbat forest which was referred to at the Dingwall sitting. I thought after going home that I should like to look up the estate records to see whether or not I had made a return to the Crown Office regarding that forest. I could find no trace of any such, so I wrote to the Crown Office on the subject, and the reply I have received is to the effect that the return was made by the county assessor Mr Foster.

56,196. But it is not in the return?—Of course, I am not responsible for that.

56,197. Not at all; I am not suggesting that.—There was a more recent return made to Mr Malcolm, Invergarry, and I find I had returned it as a forest; but I certainly did omit to make the correction in the valuation roll.

56,198. That is, to alter the words 'deer forest 'grazings' into 'deer forest'?—Yes. In 1886 when the farm was cleared it was continued under sheep for the whole of that year: the sheep were sold off in the back-end of that year, and in making the return for that year we described the ground as a sheep grazing and shooting. In the following year it is the custom for the assessor to send the printed schedules of the previous year for us to revise. In making that revisal, we looked at the figures, which were of more importance to us, and we over-looked correcting the description, which was, of course, the description given in the preceding year's roll. That, unfortunately, has gone on from year to year until now it has been corrected. I am very sorry for the slip, but it was purely accidental. [Mr Sutherland.—But we cannot allow it to be said that the assessor is responsible for it, if the assessor gave the description he got; it is not his error?—I cannot hold myself responsible, seeing I made no return.]

56,199. As I understand it, you were not applied to by the Crown Office for a return?—No, we were not applied to.

56,200. There is, in the first place, Coulmore or Drumruinie; in the second place Rhidorroch; and in the third place, Tolmuick, all forests belonging to the late Lord Cromartie. Did you make no return with regard to these forests?—No, I am not aware that we did.

56,201. Who do you suppose did make the return?—My impression is that the Crown Office applied to the county assessor, and that he made the return from the valuation roll.

56,202. Then Garbat was not, in the knowledge of the assessor, a forest?—Probably not; and possibly he might have been misled by the entry in the valuation roll.

56,203. He would necessarily have returned it as a forest if you had entered it as a forest?—Yes. I merely show that that was entirely a slip, and that when making the return sometime later, we entered it as a forest.

56,204. When did you make the return to Mr Malcolm?—In April, 1893.

56,205. Because he impugned the accuracy of this Parliamentary Return of 1891 very seriously, and I suppose he may have been enabled to do so from a return he obtained himself by communicating with those who represent land-owners?—Yes, I understood he had said so, but I am very glad we are not responsible so far as Garbat is concerned.

56,206. Mr Sutherland.—That you are not responsible?—So far as Garbat is concerned.

56,207. But you understand perfectly well the way the valuation roll is made. The assessor sends to the owners of property, schedules to fill up?—Yes.

56,208. And out of these schedules when returned, the valuation roll is made by the assessor?—Yes.

56,209. So the assessor is entirely dependent upon the returns made in the schedules for his facts?—Yes,

Ullapool.

William Gunn.

I admit having made the slip so far as not correcting the description of Garbat in the valuation roll.

56,210. After it was changed into a deer forest?—Yes.

56,211. The Chairman.—Who gave the areas to the assessor?—That I cannot say.

56,212. We find the areas stated quite specifically in their turn: Coulmore or Drumruinie 20,000; Rhidorroch 37,000; Tolmuick 1,500. Who gave these figures to the assessor?—I am unable to say: I don't know how he got them. We have no record of having made any return to anybody. It is quite possible we may have made a return to the assessor, but we have no trace of it.

56,213. How far back did you go?—I went back as far as 1890.

56,214. That was the year immediately preceding this return?—Yes.

56,215. Would not the assessor fall, properly speaking, to get them from you as the custodier of the estate documents?—I should think so.

56,216. And the local authority upon the matter?—Yes, I should think so.

56,217. What I am struck with is that an endeavour was made to get information from an assessor who had really no responsibility in the matter except so far as making up the valuation roll is concerned, and no endeavour to get the information from you who are a responsible officer representing the estate?—If Mr Foster applied to us we have no record of the fact; we always keep a copy of records of that kind.

[Adjourned.]

Foyers Estate, Inverness.

Charles Innes.

Statement by Charles Innes, Solicitor, Inverness, Commissioner on the Foyers Estate, for the information of the Highlands and Islands Commission (1892).

I have been Commissioner for Mr Cuninghame of Foyers for 20 years. Prior to 1874 I acted for 11 years as law agent on the estate. In this way I have been personally acquainted with the various farms and holdings on the estate for over 30 years.

In the year 1882 the then tenant of the farm of Gorthlick gave up his tenancy, his lease having come to an end. There had been an outbreak of pleuro-pneumonia in the byres and a large number of valuable cattle had to be killed with a view to stamping out the disease. This created a prejudice against the farm and though attempts were made to secure a tenant none was found. The proprietor then resolved to keep the farm in his own hands and to work it as a mixed farm of sheep and cattle with grain, grass and roots. The outrun extended to about 1200 acres, mostly heather land and the cultivated arable land to 120 acres or thereby. Mr Cuninghame founded ten years ago a pedigreed herd of Aberdeen Angus polled cattle, which have proved very suitable for the district. There are about 25 head of cattle usually on the farm. He has also about 440 breeding blackfaced ewes on the pasture and outrun. Greyfaced lambs are bred from them. The ewes which are the cast of the Compass stock—are sent to Meallagy (situated about 7 miles from Gorthlick) for two months in the summer. The cattle are confined to the arable land in summer and autumn and have the run of the pasture land on Gorthlick in winter when the weather is suitable. In bad winter weather they are kept in the byres. The farm could not be worked profitably without the outrun. Indeed, I doubt if it would pay the outlays if restricted to arable land alone. Gorthlick is about 700 feet above sea level. The seasons have been very precarious. The rain this year has greatly injured the hay, turnip and potato crops. It will not be possible to keep the stock without artificial feeding. In Stratherrick the farmers suffer mostly from rain. In late harvests the frosts and sometimes snow also injure the crops. During the past ten years in only two years have there been bumper crops—that is 1883 and 1891. Sometimes the spring weather is bad, at other times while springs have been good the weather in harvest has been bad and vice versa.

Charles Innes.

Wester Aberchalder contains 116 acres arable, 198 acres meadow land (often flooded) and 7 acres planted wood. The remaining portion of the farm extends to 1829 acres and consists of natural wood, pasture and moor land. Wester Aberchalder is let under lease to two brothers whose father occupied the farm before them for 19 years.

Lower Foyers includes the Lands of Glenlia, Dalbreck and the Home Farm of Foyers. They are all situated in the neighbourhood of the game coverts. The farms are of a limited extent. There are about 50 acres of cultivated land on Glenlia and Dalbreck and about 500 of heather, pasture, woods, &c. On the Home Farm about 30 acres are cultivated. There are also about 40 acres old grass. The soil is poor, thin stuff, which cannot be cultivated profitably. The low Ardarroch field is frequently flooded by the rising of Loch Ness. There is very little outrun attached to the farm, the ground in the neighbourhood being planted and enclosed and embracing the policies. There is at the west end of the estate near the loch a bit of rough rocky land suitable only for goats. No sheep are sent there. The old mansion-house is close to the arable land and the private approach road runs through the lands known as Ardarroch. The ground in the neighbourhood has been laid off in the expectancy of a new mansion being erected. On lower Foyers and Gorthlick I may mention that 2339 acres are under wood out of a total of 5579 acres. About 16 years ago 360 acres or thereby of Tyndrum were offered as pasturage to the crofters but they did not accept the proposal and the lands were then planted. The remainder of the estate consists to a great extent of pasture, moorlands, peat mosses, &c. The Home Farm and Glenlia are cultivated separately. Three horses are kept at Foyers: about eight head of cattle: and 50 ewes are wintered. Occasionally other stock are turned on from Gorthlick. On Glenlia and Dalbreck there are two horses and a colt, six cross cows and their calves, and about 250 ewes are wintered and additional stock also occasionally put on from Gorthlick. The Home Farm, Glenlia, and Dalbreck are cultivated under regular rotations. The corn crops are regularly reaped. In no year have the crops remained uncut to be eaten up by game. Hay is regularly cut, the average being from 80 to 100 stones to the acre. The turnips this year and generally are fairly good. Pheasants are yearly reared and there are numerous rabbits which eat to some extent the crops. They require to be fed like other animals but they do not eat up everything grown on those farms. The lands are decidedly not used merely for sporting purposes. The cultivated portions are wire-netted so as to protect them from rabbits. The pheasants are mainly maintained by imported food specially laid down for them, as is the practice on every estate possessing coverts on which pheasants are reared. Mr Cuninghame and his friends only shoot the Lower Foyers coverts during one week in the year. Turnips are carted every year from Glenlia and the Home Farm to Gorthlick, where the principal cattle stock is kept. In the time of the last proprietor, Mr Walker, the Home Farm was kept in his own hands. He reclaimed at considerable expense the lands of Dalbreck which he also kept in his own hands. Later on the latter were worked along with the previously existing farm of Glenlia. There are no buildings on Dalbreck. These several lands were let for some years by the present proprietor and possession afterwards taken by him, on the tenants' leases coming to an end. If the idea of cutting up the Ardarroch and Home Farm and dividing same into small farms — suggested by one of the witnesses examined before the Commissioners—was carried out the value of the estate would be complete'y

Charles Innes. destroyed and it might become unsaleable seeing that the private approach—not a very lengthy one—to the specially prepared Mansion House site runs through the lands.

The farm buildings already erected are suitable for the existing holdings but would be too large for smaller holdings.

From the explanations above given it is submitted that the farms on Lower Foyers do not come within the Remit to the Commission.

Upper Foyers consists of Compass, Meallagy, Garrogy and Glenmarkie. Meallagy has generally been worked along with the Farm of Gorthlick (even when the latter was let) of which it is the summering ground. It summers about 1000 ewes and wedders. Part of them come from other portions of the estate, some belonging to tenants to whom the right of summer pasture has been let. The proprietor has only a portion of Glenmarkie in his own hands. The other portion is let on lease to the tenants of Wester Aberchalder. The whole of these lands extend to about 12,500 acres, about 200 being old arable, and situated at Compass, the remainder being pasture, moorland, natural woods, roads, &c. In 1882 the tenant of the sheep farm of Compass and Garrogy retired, his lease being at an end. Attempts were made from time to time to let the farm, but without success. I suggested to the proprietor that as there was then a great cry in the Highlands about forming small farms, he might try the experiment. He agreed and instructed me to put on the market six moderately sized farms of from 22 to 24 acres arable with some improvable pasture extending to 58 acres divided over the six holdings and about 300 acres of pasture also so divided. The following is a note of the exact acreages of each proposed holding, viz. :—

	Arable.			Improvable Pasture.			Pasture.
	ac.	rds.	po.	ac.	rds.	po.	ac.	rds.	po.
Lot I.	22	1	36	6	1	20	32	3	8
Lot II.	21	3	36	15	3	34	61	2	22
Lot III.	22	1	4	8	3	18	19	0	24
Lot IV. Near houses	21	3	12	10	3	24	101	2	0
Lot IV. Outlying	5	0	20
Lot V.	22	3	15	11	3	28	32	3	0
Lot VI.	24	0	1	4	1	32	46	2	38
Total of low grounds,	140	2	4	58	1	36	294	2	92

There was also a suggestion that a portion of the hill ground might be given off as a common pasture. I had a considerable amount of correspondence with applicants for particulars but nothing came of the scheme, I failing to secure anyone who was prepared or able to assist in building houses, ploughing up the land, and fencing and draining, as also providing sufficient stock. The terms upon which the holdings were to be let were, subject to any alteration mutually agreed upon, as follows :—

1. Proprietor to provide without payment materials, wood, lime, slate, &c. for houses and steadings on condition that the tenant erected the buildings. If preferred, landlord to erect buildings on tenant agreeing to pay 5 per cent. on cost of erection.

2. Leases to be for 19 years.

3. Each offerer to satisfy proprietor that he had sufficient capital to stock his holding and fulfil other obligations.

4. If entry given at Whitsunday buildings probably to be finished by Martinmas from which term lease and payment of rent would run.

5. Tenants to bring land into cultivation and to make such drains as were necessary at their own expense.

6. Each holding to be fenced separately by tenants; expense of march fences to be paid jointly.

Each applicant was invited to lodge an offer on the above or such other terms as suggested themselves to him.

About the time at which the small holdings scheme was formed, offers were made to take in for pasturing purposes on Upper Foyers, sheep belonging to some of the smaller tenants on Lower Foyers, but not one of them thought it worth his while to send his sheep to summering so far from home. If the low lands of Compass, and especially the old arable now attached to the farm, were withdrawn the whole wintering on the farm would be taken away and hence no ewe stock could thereafter be wintered at home. At present about 1000 ewes out of a stock of 2400 are kept on the farm all the year round. In addition to these about 600 wedders are wintered at Garrogy; the remaining stock consisting of young ewes and hoggs are sent to the low country to winter. Charles Innes

During the period (1871–94) of Mr Cuninghame's proprietorship of what is known as the estate of Foyers he has expended in connection with new buildings and repairs, plantations, drains, fences, and other improvements the following amounts :—

Buildings and Piers,	£8546	18	11
Plantations, . . .	6446	3	3
Fences, Dykes, Drains, Roads and Bridges,	4107	14	9
				19,100	16 11
In addition to the above the following allowances were made to tenants in bad years :
Abatements from rents, .	634	5	2
Seed, oats, and lime, .	318	7	7
				952	12 9
				£20,053	9 8

A considerable portion of the money expended was paid to the small tenants and their families, the instructions to the estate officials having always been to employ tenants or their sons when they could be got. When Mr Cuninghame purchased the estate there were with one or two exceptions no slated houses on the small holdings. The number of thatched houses is now very limited.

The tenants of the shootings upon the estate as a rule employ estate crofters as ghillies with their ponies. The money earned in this way amounts to a considerable sum. The shooting season extends over between two and three months and that at a time of year when the crofters can undertake the work without interfering with the ordinary working of their farms.

There have during Mr Cuninghame's time and I think during Mr Walker's time been no evictions on the estate. Mr Walker gave off in 1861 all the lands along Lochgarthside at nominal rents on improving leases of 19 years.

As an evidence that Mr Cuninghame has not rack-rented his small tenants, I may state that the reductions sanctioned by the Crofters Commission only amounted to £7, 8s. 10d. more than the amounts at which Mr Cuninghame had offered to renew the tenancies.

The following is a list showing the number of workmen employed on the estate by the proprietor :—

I. In connection with Farms.

A. On Gorthlick Farm.

Three men engaged in cultivation of farm; one cattleman, one shepherd, two women.

B. Glenlia and Home Farm.

Three men engaged in cultivation of farms; one shepherd.

Note.—There are in addition at various times of the year a number of men and women all belonging to the estate employed on these farms.

C. Upper Foyers Sheep Farm.

Four shepherds. In addition there is a General Farm Manager who superintends all the farms.

Charles Innes.

II. Foresters' Department including Plantations, Roads, Fences, &c.

One forester; one assistant forester, one gardener and seven men in constant employment.

Note.—In addition a considerable number of residents on the estate are employed at various seasons of the year.

III. Gamekeepers Department.

A. Lower Foyers.

One head keeper at Foyers, one keeper at Wester Aberchalder, one keeper at Gorthlick, one keeper at Glenlia, one keeper engaged at Kennels, one keeper engaged about Pheasants.

In the shooting season a considerable number of ghillies and beaters resident on the estate are employed.

B. Upper Foyers.

Two keepers whose wages are paid by proprietor. In addition the shooting tenant has a kennel man and generally six ghillies.

Note.—The greater number of men employed in the several departments are married.

INVERNESS, 4th September 1894.

Donald Macphee

LOCHIEL ESTATES.—DECLARATION BY MR DONALD MACPHEE, SOLICITOR, FORT-WILLIAM.

At Fort-William the fourteenth day of September Eighteen hundred and ninety-four: In presence of Colin Young, Esquire, Provost of the Burgh of Fort-William, and one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the County of Inverness.

Compeared Donald Macphee, Solicitor, Fort-William, who, being solemnly sworn and examined, Declares—I have seen a report of the examination of Donald Cameron, Esquire, of Lochiel, and a statement made by him before the Commissioners acting under Her Majesty's Royal Commission, Highlands and Islands, in the columns of the Highland News newspaper, in which, besides disputing the accuracy of specific statements made by me before the said Commissioners at Fort-William, he characterises it generally as of a misleading and random nature. I take this opportunity of declaring my adherence to my former statement as substantially accurate, and challenging Lochiel's characterisation of it as unwarranted by facts.

As to Lochiel's statement that he never evicted a tenant, I subjoin list of actions of removal at his instance against the tenants therein named taken from the Sheriff Court Records at Fort-William (Appendix A, page 1428). The eviction of Samuel Cameron, Drimarbin, Nos. 22 and 23 in list, was carried out under circumstances of exceptional severity, and excited general indignation in this district. This list, and the Sheriff Court Records, afford documentary evidence of the incorrectness of Lochiel's statement on this head.

He also stated that none of his crofter tenants had applied to him for more land or an enlargement of their holdings. I respectfully assert that this statement is not correct, and in support of my assertion beg to refer Her Majesty's Commissioners to the application by five crofters at Kinlochiel for such enlargement, and also to a dispute with Lochiel about their marches in their application for fair rent. This dispute was practically a claim for an enlargement of their holding, and though opposed by Lochiel's agent, was after a lengthened proof conceded to the crofters. On this account, and because one of the five crofters had, in the interval between the lodging of the application for enlargement and the sitting of the Crofters Commission, removed from his holding, I recommended the crofters to be satisfied with the enlargement obtained under the Fair Rent application, and to withdraw the other, which was done.

I produce herewith proceedings and correspondence relative to a claim by the crofters on Lochiel's estate at Ballachulish, to have restored to them part of their hill pasture improperly fenced off and appropriated by the then tenant of Ballachulish hotel, to whom Lochiel had given about 20 crofts to form a home farm (Appendix B, page 1429). These also prove an application by Lochiel's crofters for more land. Donald Macphee.

As to Lochiel's statement that the farm of Clunes is three miles from Achnacarry, while that may be true of the most distant part of the farm, it is the fact, as will be confirmed from a reference to the Ordnance Survey Maps, that the nearest part of that farm and the farm-house and offices are not farther off from Achnacarry than about one-half mile.

As to his statement that before the Crofter Commissioners I complained that he refused to feu, while before the Royal Commissioners I complained that he did feu, and that the feu-duties contributed nothing to local taxation, thereby committing myself to a contradictory position—I may explain that I spoke of two distinct things.

Before the Crofters Commission I complained that in feuing, Lochiel only gave out ground to those prepared to erect villas and other costly erections on the feus, which operated as a practical prohibition against the erection of workmen's houses, and so caused a house famine in Fort-William, and raised enormously the rents of workmen's houses there. This I submit does not in any way conflict with the statement I made before the Royal Commissioners.

In making the foregoing declaration I have assumed that the statements imputed to Lochiel in the columns of the Highland News newspaper are substantially correct.

Lochiel's other statements, in so far as they cannot be refuted by production of, or reference to, authentic documents, I challenge as incorrect in so far as they do not coincide with mine.

All which I declare to be truth as I shall answer to God. (Signed) DOND. MACPHEE.

are now let to the Trustees of the late John Cameron, hotelkeeper, North Ballachulish, from year to year.

4. Upwards of twenty years ago, one-third of the land of the township was given to John Cameron, the late tenant of the said hotel; and permission was given him to fence off an equivalent proportion of the hill grazings of the township. The said John Cameron taking advantage of the permission, fenced off considerably more than the one-third. The applicants protested to the said landlord, but without effect.

5. The Applicants have lately applied to the said landlord to re-adjust the proportions of the hill grazings, but he has refused, or at least, delays to do so.

(2.) Copy Letter: Henry Mackenzie, Solicitor, Oban, to Donald Cameron, Esquire, of Lochiel.

OBAN, 14*th February* 1888.

SIR,—I am instructed by the Crofters on your estate at North Ballachulish to ascertain whether you are prepared to appoint a neutral person, whose duty it shall be on an early day to re-adjust the division of the hill pasture as between my clients and the tenant of the hotel lands at Lochleven.

I make this application in terms of the provisions of the Crofters Holdings Act, 1886, and in these circumstances. Upwards of 20 years ago, there was added to the said hotel lands one-third of the North Ballachulish Crofts, and the tenant of the hotel, the now deceased John Cameron, was allowed by you, or those representing you, to fence off a corresponding portion of the hill. In doing so, however, Mr Cameron did not enclose his proper proportion, but took considerably more than a third share. Against this action the crofters protested strenuously, and, as I am informed, went in a body to you with their remonstrance; but, notwithstanding, Mr Cameron was allowed to construct his fence on his own line.

Now that the lease has expired and the hotel is advertised to be let, my clients rightly think that the present is a suitable time for rectifying the division of the hill, and they respectfully submit that their request for a re-adjustment of the shares thereof effeiring to their and the hotelkeeper's holdings, at the sight of a neutral person to be named by yourself, is a reasonable and proper one; and I shall be glad to hear from you within ten days from this date, saying whether or not you are to accede to the proposal.

By the provisions of the Act referred to, this matter can, and, if need be, will be brought under the notice of the Crofter Commissioners for adjustment, but my clients are hopeful that the reasonableness of their request will readily commend itself to you, and that you will accede without difficulty thereto and so obviate the necessity as well as trouble and expense of applying for the Commissioners' intervention.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Donald Macphee.

(3.) Copy Reply, Lochiel to Henry Mackenzie.

ACHNACARRY, FORT-WILLIAM,
17*th February* 1888.

SIR,—The matter referred to in your letter of the 14th, which has just reached me on my return here, is of some importance.

No deputation of crofters has ever approached me on the subject. My factor I think mentioned it to me in conversation just before I went south a month ago, but before that the grievance was unknown or at least unheard of.

I must therefore make inquiry before replying to your letter.

I am disposed to agree with you that arbitration is better than an appeal to the Commissioners; but there may be a little difficulty in avoiding the latter, even though the question of the fence should be adjusted in the manner suggested by you. Of course, if the Commissioners came at all to Ballachulish it would be better that they should deal with every matter which may be brought under their notice according to the Act, and it might be rather difficult to obtain the assurance that their presence will not be required. Please think over this while I am making inquiry about the fence Yours faithfully,

(Signed) DONALD CAMERON.

NORTH BALLACHULISH.
February, 29 1888.

SIR,—There was a meeting on Saturday night and the papers was read and there was then six present who was at Achnacarry and saw Lochiel personally and wonder how he can say that it is an unheard of thing.

They are all for the hill pasture, and are very sorry because I had such trouble that my name is not in. Could you not have it in for the hill.—Yours truly,
